ACKNOWLEDGMENTS

I would like to thank the many people without whom this work would not have been possible. Contact Base, where I worked for the first ten years of my career, introduced me to and nurtured my interest in the remarkable power of social theatre for social development. During the course of my research work, both my ex-colleagues at Contact Base and the excellent team of Jana Sanskriti, in particular its Founder Director Sanjoy Ganguly, have given me all the support I needed for field work, access to the right stakeholders in rural areas, and inputs without which I would not have been able to complete this work successfully. My advisor Professor Anjali Monteiro as well as my DAC members, Professor K. P. Jayasankar and Professor Amita Bhide have provided many important insights throughout the process. Dr. Swati Banerjee and Dr. Shilpa Phadke provided valuable feedback as discussants for my proposal presentation and synopsis presentation respectively. I would particularly like to thank Professor Monteiro for her continuous handholding over the last four years.
