Acknowledgements

It would be a great pleasure to thank the many persons who have helped me to complete this project. I would especially like to thank my supervisor Prof. Bhagwan Josh for his patience and encouragement and facilitating my access to information and records. The study of history requires attention to the history of history writing. I am grateful to him for introducing me to some of the key thinkers on history whose works have changed the shape of historical inquiry.

I thank all my colleagues at the Centre for Historical Studies, JNU, for permitting me to be away from teaching and avail my study leave to complete this thesis. In their individual capacity they have given me a wide range of support: from suggesting readings and loaning me books for the chapters, to generally encouraging me to move ahead. I am indebted to my senior colleague, Prof. Himanshu Prabha Ray, for her immense concern with my research and for her unfailing warmth and nurturing spirit which has been instrumental in keeping me on tracks to finish writing the thesis.

At the Centre, almost all colleagues contributed in several different ways to my thesis. Special thanks are due to Prof. Sucheta Mahajan, for her comments on my draft (as a Clause 9B committee member) and for encouragement; Prof. Kunal Chakrabarty, Chairperson, for supporting my requests for grants and permitting me to leave the country to go for field trips; Prof. Neeladri Bhattacharya, the ex Chairperson for assisting me in several ways; Prof. Rajat Datta for assisting me with ethnographical information I needed to consult; Prof. Kumkum Roy for sharing a ‘feminist’ space for discussion of life and work; Prof. Ranabir Chakravarti for discussions on historiography; Dr. Pius Malekandathil for his insightful suggestions for Chapter 1 and for loaning me relevant books; Dr. R. Mahalakshmi, for inviting me to present my research in a conference organized by her and for her warmth and support; Dr. Najaf Haider for his insightful suggestions; Dr. Yogesh Sharma for boosting my morale; Dr. Arvind Sinha, for loaning me books from and discussions on cinematic representation; Dr. Radhika Singha, for gifting me relevant books and suggesting readings on law and gender; Dr. Nandita Prasad Sahai for her discussion on widow remarriage in the medieval context and Dr. Joy Pachua for her friendly support.
I have also benefited from the academic institutional support within my University from senior faculty. I owe special thanks to my senior colleagues Prof. Mridula Mukherjee, Director Nehru Memorial Museum and Library and Prof. Aditya Mukherjee, Director of Jawaharlal Nehru Institute of Advanced Studies, JNU. I also received a lot of encouragement from Prof. G.K.Chadha, ex Vice Chancellor, JNU; Prof. Rajendra Prasad, ex Rector of JNU, extended all possible University's financial assistance for my research trips abroad; Prof. Nandu Ram, the Dean of School of Social Sciences, showed his generosity by extending financial grant from the School head to enable me to hire technical assistance for making the maps for thesis; I am also thankful to Prof. Amitabh Kundu, ex Dean of School, for similar assistance. I thank Prof. V.K.Jain, acting Registrar JNU and Dean of Students for being immensely supportive and for training me to combine my research with administrative responsibilities; Prof Shatendra Sharma, Director of University Instrumentation Centre, for guiding me through the new technology.

I also thank my warden colleagues: Dr. Atul Johri and Dr. K.B.Usha for taking on extra work in the hostel during my absence from the hostel, whenever I needed to travel out of city or country for field trips.

I wish to thank my many colleagues in the other Centres/Schools of the University. I am thankful to Dr.Rakesh Batabyal, Deputy Director of Academic Staff College, who provided me the resources and the venue to hold a day long workshop (8th March 2010) on ‘Gender Relations in Indian Cinema’. Chapter 6 on cinema and widowhood has also gained from discussions during this workshop.

I thank: Prof. Saraswati Raju, Centre for Studies for Regional Development, JNU, for helping me understand application of geography to gender studies; Dr. Rohan D’Souza, Centre for Social Science Policy, a vibrant scholar himself, for familiarizing me with developmental issues and introducing me to academia working on themes other than the mainstream historical studies; Dr Milap Chand Sharma, for familiarizing me with the GIS technology to make maps; Dr. Ashish Agnihotri, at the Centre for French Studies and his wife, Jivita for enriching discussions on gender issues and helping me connect with scholars in France.
Some of the other friends, who along with their families, have been a source of my emotional sustenance on the campus, include: Ravikes, Harish Naraindas, Nupur, and Dhananjay.

There is another significant set of individuals and their families without whom I could not have been able to consult research material on the foreign soil: I owe a very special thanks to Mohan Luthra, who welcomed me and lodged me in his house in London and helped in every possible manner including his insightful suggestions on my research. I wish to thank his parents for making my trips to London so graciously warm.

In UK I am extremely thankful to Prof. S.J. Kleinberg, an authority on history of women/widowhood in USA, for taking time out of her busy schedule to discuss my research at length and for her suggestions; and for inviting me to present a paper at Brunel University, West London.

I owe thanks to Prof. Margrit Shildrick and Prof. Catherine Clinton at Queens University, Belfast, for inviting me to present my research at the International Forum for Women’s Studies, (Queens University) and for providing me with resources and infrastructure.

International institutional support for my Ph.D came from Charles Wallace Trust (UK). I sincerely thank the Director, Mr. Richard Alford for this. I am also thankful to Dr. Jon E. Wilson, King’s College, London for supporting my stay in London under a collaborative agreement between King’s and JNU and for inviting me to present my research. I am also thankful to Centre for Gender Studies, University of Sussex, Brighton, for inviting me to present a seminar paper on my doctoral theme.

In USA: I wish to thank Ms. Nasrine Gross, ‘Ustad’, and her husband, Prof. Max Gross, their son Carl for an unforgettable experience of warmth and hospitality at their home in Washington and Kabul. It has been a very enriching/emotional experience for me to be associated with her movement for women’s rights and with her literacy schools in Afghanistan.

At New York University, I am grateful to Prof. Ann Marcus and Prof. Teboho Moja, for their inviting me to speak and for their warm welcome and institutional support.

In Europe and Scandinavia: I am thankful to Dr. Lisa Folkmarson Kall and Dr. Maybritt Ohman, at Centre for Gender Research, Uppsala University (Sweden) for inviting me to join their Centre as a Visiting Researcher for a month during the period of my leave in 2010. The chapter on 'Body, Widowhood and Representations of Consciousness' is the outcome of this research visit as part of the experience of 'Body/Embodiment' network. During the presentation, many constructive comments were made by colleagues and students at Uppsala. I owe special thanks to Prof. Maria Agren at Uppsala University for discussing my research and for her suggestions. I am also thankful to Dr. Ravinder Kaur, University of Copenhagen, for inviting me to present a version of my paper at Copenhagen South Asia Workshop on 'Writing South Asia' at Nordic Institute of Asian Studies at Copenhagen.

The chapter on cinematic iconic representations of widowhood has benefited from presentation at the European Social Science History Conference, Ghent, Belgium in 2010. I am thankful to European Social Science History Conference for offering me financial assistance to participate in the conference.

Last but not the least, I wish to extend my heartfelt thanks to the staff of library and archives both in India (Uttar Pradesh State Archives, Allahabad Record Office, Nagari Pracharini Sabha Library, Hindi Sahitya Sammelan Library, Allahabad, NMML, National Archives, Central Library, JNU, Departmental Special Assistance Library (DSA), JNU, Archives in Contemporary History, JNU) and abroad (British Library, Library of Congress, Uppsala University library). Specifically, I would like to thank the Deputy Librarian, Dr. Manorama Tripathi, and Mr. Soumesh at JNU for finding relevant books and articles whenever I requested. I would like to sincerely thank Mrs. Shashi Kapoor for her warm support. I thank Dr. Lohia and his staff at DSA library and Mr. Dharmendra at CHS. Among the University administration staff, I wish to thank: Mr. Yashwant Singh (Deputy Academic Registrar); Mr. Gaur (Academic Assistant Registrar), Mr. Baweja (Academic); Mr. Sohanlal (Deputy Finance Officer); Mr. Satish and Mr Satinder Singh (A.O) at School office and Rakesh Arya.

On the personal front, I would like to attribute this thesis to my grandparents, who are no longer alive and would have been delighted to see the final product.
I thank my parents for making it possible for me to write the thesis by taking on a lot of responsibility for running the household by themselves. I thank my extended family members for their support and affection during the course of my present research.

Jyoti Atwal

New Delhi

2011