Millions of voiceless people fall ill and fall prey to the unjust health system, get pushed further down to impoverishment every day. They also pay taxes diligently; it is their hard earned money that allows us to pursue research at temples of higher education like JNU. I would like to take this opportunity to express my sincere gratitude to them for inspiring me through their day-to-day struggles, to take up my task honestly.

Sharmistha has been a continuous source of support and strength, withering all the turmoil, taking care of me and our beloved Sahana and allowing me to continue my research undisturbed. In the process she has suffered a lot, undergone irreparable losses, without complaining even once. Neither do I have adequate words to thank her nor do I have means to compensate for her losses. I would remain indebted to her forever. I carry the guilt of not being able to give enough time to Sahana during the exciting initial days of exploration.

Professor Mohan Rao, my supervisor, has always inspired me, kept faith on me and supported me in many ways. In turn, probably, I could only offer inconveniences to him. At times I have almost forced him out of his room, which he had kindly allowed me to work in. He has suffered considerable agony because of my perennial delays. I will never forget how delighted he was when I gave him my first draft. The other thing I offered was my erroneous English and crazy style of referencing, all of which he has patiently corrected and helped me improve. It is needless to say that I have learned a lot from him academically, through these last eight years of engagement. I would like to take this opportunity to express my heartfelt gratitude towards him.

I would also like to gratefully acknowledge my gratitude to Dr. Saumen Chattopadhyay, my co-supervisor. The way he accommodated me out of the way, putting off many other impending priorities, often late at night, is phenomenal. He would always listen to my filibustering and politely correct me at the end, never trying to force upon his ideas. His openness to ideas, willingness to learn new things, ability to express most difficult topics in simplest possible terms, are rare traits which I would like to imbibe. It is through the long discussions with him that I could enrich my understanding on Public Economics. I would remain grateful to him forever.

I would like to thank all the faculties of Centre of Social Medicine and Community Health, especially Prof. Rama Baru, Dr. Rajib Dasgupta, who have always been so affectionate to me, helping me in many ways. Prof. Imrana Qadeer, Prof Nayar, Dr. Sanghamitra Acharya, Dr Ritu Priya, Dr. Ramila Bisht, Dr. Sunita Reddy through their teaching and interactions have helped me understand nuances of Public Health. One of the saddest moments of my life is loss of Dr Alpana Sagar, who had inspired me to pursue research at CSMCH, mentored me in many ways.

Innumerable thanks to Dr Amit Sengupta, my mentor, not only for providing financial support at crucial years, but also for patiently bearing with my absence from work, perpetual delays, and for exposing to leading scholars and activists on Public Health. Thanks to Dr. Jha, Yamini and Subrat, for providing me immense opportunity to work and enrich my understanding. Thanks are also due to Dr. Alex, for supporting me during the last phase of research.

Special thanks to Dr. Surya Kanta Mishra, former Minister-in-Charge, Department of Health and Family Welfare, Government of West Bengal and his team, for allowing me to use crucial information and data. I have received exceptional support from staffs at CSMCH documentation unit, Dinesh and Ganga madam. The staffs at NIPFP library have also been tireless in their support, especially Azad madam, Dharam Vir ji, Mohan Singh, Manju madam, George madam, Puran Singh and off-course Mr. Chidambaram. I am really thankful to all of them for making this work smoother.

I have been luckily blessed with many friends who have always stood by me in difficult times. I would like to thank Sandeep for all the crucial data and references he provided. One of the most enriching experiences during this phase has been our discussions during the evening tea. I would always remember these sessions fondly. There had been hardly any crucial juncture in my life, during the last few years, where Deepak, the Savior, has not to come to my rescue. The way he came to help me out during last phase of the PhD is simply phenomenal. I would always remain indebted to Dipak Abhnav, Archana and Arthi PM, who happily volunteered to help me during the crazy last days. Sumit and Kaushik Bhadra have come up with crucial help with data and Partha Sahoo, Bijoya Di, with insights when I needed them desperately. Many many thanks to them. I would also like thank my comrades, Surajit Das, Surajit Majumder, Rohit, Prasenjit, Albeena, Vijoo, Sibaj Bhai, Satyaki, Abhijit, Subhansil, Sona and many others who have always been supportive to me allowing me long leave from work, provided proper perspective, without which life becomes meaningless. Special thanks to Basabi Di, Sakti, Kadir, Siga, Pinaki, Arpita, Ana, Nibedita, Taposhik, Pooja, Bhumika, Nilachala, Gyana, Rajesh, Kaushik Ganguli, Sayeed, Aparna, Tarvez, Mahesh, Khwaja bhai, Harsh ji, who made my life beautiful with their charming company.

This work would have not seen the light of the day without innumerable sacrifices and teaching of my parents. Whatever I am today is because of them. I don’t have the words to thank them. Hope this work would make them happy. I would also like to thank Poli Di, who has been phenomenal in providing me all the support at home. Thanks are also due to my mother-in-law and Raja, who have always come to my rescue in difficult times, encouraged me in several ways.

This work could have been impossible without the support of many, only a few of them I could name. However, for the shortcoming of the work, if any, I shall be solely responsible.
