ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

Writing a Ph.D. is a long process and requires quite some determination. However, the task is finished and now is the time to say my earnest and heartfelt thank you to a number of important people.

The five years of thinking, discussing, reflecting, throwing things in the bin, and starting all over again followed by data-gathering and writing-up processes involved all kinds of different mental stages of the researcher. It is often said that doing a Ph.D includes curiosity, enjoyment, satisfaction, and very often stress, a lack of self-confidence, losing orientation, uncertainty, and out-right torture. It is all true; there were times of fun and there were times characterised by simple hard work, which sometimes triggered the above-stated feelings. The cloudy skies were not very helpful in that respect either. Very often there were only various shades of grey in the sky at times when we were looking for some blue to clear our minds. In times when the grey clouds made their full impact felt, the cynical phrase words, words, words could often be heard in the office. I split my thank you into two sections: First, I focus on the professional life followed by the support I received in my private life.

Four people are of considerable importance for the success of the Ph.D. First, my Research director, Prof.Y.P.Rama Subbaiah, guided me through the task with the right amount of supervision, never too guiding, never too distant. Furthermore, I enjoyed some nice moments during our stays in various University Campus. I thank for his inspirational commitment to the work of corporate crime and violence, and for his belief in my ability to contribute to this important work through this thesis. It was an honour to write this thesis under his supervision. My Dean and a great Philosopher Prof.A.Subramanyam, deserves also special credit because his advice generally pointed me in the right direction and helped to avoid unnecessary problems. Occasionally, he opened up ways to solve theoretical and practical problems when I stood in front of a high wall. The third person of importance for finishing the thesis was Prof.L.Jayasree, Head of Department, P.G.Department of Legal Studies & Research. In numerous discussions we solved several theoretical and methodological problems sometimes we created additional problems of which most could be solved in a new round of discussions. Her expertise in pedagogy has inspired me to think more carefully about how to understand criminology of contemporary society. The fourth person who is instrumental in selecting the topic in my specialized area of research was my previous guide and a dynamic person, Prof. P. Bhaskara Rao. Aside from the direct supervision, we introduced weekly sessions on the balcony to discuss work-related issues, but also issues of a more private nature such as politics, cricket and movies, while enjoying a bad habit. I have learned so much more from each of them in this process. Thank you all. Thank you also to Dr. Ch. Sudhakara Babu for his invaluable critique of my thesis.

My friends, who are my family, among them especially K. Srinivas Rao, G. Swami Reddy and T. Vinod Kumar, have been a source of unconditional love and support, joy and inspiration over the past few decades of my life. With respect to this thesis, their daily encouragement and patience, during what at times seemed an endless writing process, gave me the determination to persevere. A special thanks to K. Srinivas Rao, in this regard for his tireless moral and practical support on every stage of writing. Thank you to G. Swami Reddy for many sparkling conversations and words of encouragement. Last but not least, thanks to Ch. Praveen and M. Geetha, for their assistance in doing the layout of the thesis, for doing the proofreading, and for assisting in parts of the data gathering process.

Most importantly, I would like to thank my wonderful family for their support and prayers. I am deeply indebted for the examples my father set for me. He has been a positive, influential role model. A special word of thanks goes to my mother; who is a source of endless inspiration, support and love. I would not have been able to do any of this without you. My brother, sisters and their children, Bhuvana, Ramya, Srinadh and Kiran were always a safe haven in times of stress, uncertainty, and pressure. My sincere appreciation for my younger sister who has taken her time to listen and provide feedback for all my presentations that served as a foundation for my thesis. I thank once again my mom and dad for their mental, emotional, and financial support throughout my education. Through their understanding, patience, and encouragement I have gained confidence that has helped me attain my objectives. They are the individuals who have inspired me to accomplish my goals. To them I dedicate this thesis.
