ACKNOWLEDGEMENT

For the purpose of this study, I received help and support from a number of people, to whom I am deeply indebted. Foremost among them is my supervisor, Professor Sanjukta Bhattacharya, whose valuable insights, advice, and tremendous patience in correcting my drafts, helped me complete my work. She read and critiqued my chapters with utmost care, and forced me to clarify my views and rewrite the chapters taking into account every minute detail.

I express my heartfelt gratitude to Dr. Merlyn Pethe, Director of the Macdonald-Kelce Library at the University of Tampa, for giving me honorary membership to study in her library during a one year residence in Tampa, Florida. Shannon Spencer, the Librarian, spent valuable time out of her busy schedule in finding necessary articles available in the government archives, declassified documents and newspaper articles for my research. I felt no hesitation in reaching out to her in my need for resources, which I was unable to find from the other available sources. Above all, both the ladies borrowed books from other libraries of Florida, on behalf of me, which were not available at the Macdonald-Kelce Library. I have deep regard for both of them, for giving me, a foreigner, the opportunity to use their library, which contains a rich source of rare and good books, journals, and a military archive containing military documents, papers, journals, along with books for military research.

My very own departmental library and the Central Library at Jadavpur University are other good sources and treasure troves for books and journals on my subject and I wish to acknowledge the help, assistance and cooperation I received from the library staff of the Department of International Relations, Jadavpur University, and the Central Library.
Special thanks are due to Ms. Kankana Das, the Research and Reference Officer of the Taraknath Das Research Centre of Jadavpur University, for helping and guiding me in using the vast archive of Indian newspapers appropriately.

I am also indebted to the National Library, the British Council and the American Centre Library, all in Kolkata, which helped me enrich my thesis with their vast academic resources.

I also wish to thank our friend, Vikas Vishwanath, from the University of Calgary, Canada, for providing me necessary materials for the purpose of my research.

I also take this opportunity to convey my gratitude to my parents, whose constant support remained my source of inspiration. It was due to their insistence that I registered for the Ph.D. programme in Jadavpur University. My parents-in-law also stood by me all through and encouraged me to finish this task within the given schedule. I convey my special thanks to them.

My husband, Indranil, is also another pillar of support for me. He took time out of his busy office schedule, to find new research materials from the internet. His constant critique and advice helped me improve my work. I owe a lot to him.
