ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

The material for this thesis was collected after registration with the Centre for Historical Studies, JNU, in 1981 and over two field trips to the western Deccan in December 1981 and in February 1983. The Indian Council of Historical Research was kind enough to approve a study grant for the latter trip.

It is with gratitude that I acknowledge my debt to my supervisor, Dr Romila Thapar, who taught me to search beyond the obvious and to question unvalidated evidence. I am thankful to her for patiently correcting several drafts of this manuscript.

I am grateful to Dr FR Allchin of the University of Cambridge who supervised my MPhil research in 1979-80. I have received useful information on the art and architecture of the early Buddhist caves from Mr MN Deshpande, ex-Director General of the Archaeological Survey of India. During the second field trip I had the cooperation of the Deccan College, Pune, and in particular I would like to thank Dr SB Deo, Director, and Dr MK Dhavalkar, Joint Director, who were kind enough to provide me valuable information on their recent excavations in Maharashtra. It is indeed unfortunate that Mr A Ghosh, ex-Director General of the Archaeological Survey of India passed away before the completion of this thesis to which he had contributed in so many ways.

I am thankful to the staff of the Central Archaeological Library, particularly Mrs Rajni Lal and Miss Nalini Sharma, and to the staff of the libraries of the Deccan College and the University of Bombay for providing me access to rare books and unpublished theses. I am also indebted to Arundhoti Banerji for her help.
Dr S Sabherwal, Dr R Champakalakshmi and Dr BD Chattopadhyaya of the Centre for Historical Studies readily provided several references and helped sort out the issues. The discussions with Shereen Ratnagar were academically valuable and encouraging.
