ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

This doctoral thesis progressed and has been completed under the esteemed and valuable supervision of Professor K.L. Sharma. Since its inception, his sublime knowledge in the discipline of sociology remained crucial in the formulation, expression and concretization of a wide range of ideas and issues involved in this research-work. Throughout its duration, he generously gave access to his precious time, displayed a concerned involvement in my standing difficulties and always suggested constructive resolutions to the recurrent theoretical problems. The unbending and spirited presence of the academic and intellectual personality of Professor Sharma remained decisive in imparting a proper research orientation to me.

What is more, his abhorrence to any kind of indoctrination proved a prized asset since it provided sufficient space for the fresh and original conceptualizations of social reality. Above all, his compassionate and sympathetic nature helped me to overcome manifaceted existential problems including the pressing financial ones during my stay at Jawaharlal Nehru University. His systematic guidance, continuous inspiration and graciously given immense help remained vital and determining factors in the completion of this work. With my heart full of respect and regards I owe a deep sense of gratitude and indebtedness to Professor K.L. Sharma.

I am thankful to the faculty at the Centre for the Study of Social Systems, Jawaharlal Nehru University, for providing me with an opportunity, the attendant research facilities and financial assistance for pursuing the Ph.D. programme. The distinguished academic personality of Professor Yogendra Singh throughout acted as a motivating and inspirational force for the pursuance of my research career. In various capacities and for matters of critical concern to me (both academic and related) he always extended substantial help from which I got amply benefitted. I take this opportunity to express my sincere thanks to Professor Singh.

Many a times I approached Professor R.K. Jain and have sought his advice and guidance on various issues at different stages during the tenure of this study. I am highly thankful to him for providing considerable support to me. My sincere thanks are due to Professor Nirmal Singh for displaying a concerned and sympathetic attitude towards me. His steadfast support kept me afloat in many a critical moments and remained crucial for the completion of this study.

I am extremely thankful to Dr Ram Sagar Singh for his continuous motivation and inspiration which kept me working during the difficult periods. My hearty thanks are due to Dr J.S. Gandhi for his affectionate concerns with the progress of my research work. Both academically and otherwise my prolonged interaction with him proved beneficial in many ways. Thanks are also due to Dr Dipanker Gupta, Dr Ehsanul Haq and Dr H. N. Singh for their well-disposed attitude towards me.

A number of Western scholars deserve to be thanked: Some working in the same research area, regularly sent recent literature; yet others with whom I had chance to interact. Particular thanks are due to John Urry, Nicholas Ambergrombie, Bob Carter, Raimo Blom, Markku Kivinen, Harri Melin, Dick Pels and Nil Disco.

My friend Dr Bhagwan Josh throughout remained seriously involved in the progress of my work. We have repeatedly discussed a whole range of critical issues, particularly those concerning Marxism. I have greatly benefitted from his arguments, suggestions and constructive criticisms. I am extremely thankful to Dr. Josh for his substantial contribution to this study. I am also thankful to Dr Shashi Joshi for her valuable and constructive suggestions which made me aware of the many a finer points of the prevalent debates in the discipline of history.

Since my entry into J.N.U., I have nurtured a close association and friendship with Dr Raghvendra Pratap Singh. His close proximity made him well acquainted with the arguments of this thesis. He always forwarded beneficial and fruitful criticisms and extended help in many other ways for which he deserves to be amply thanked. Mr Kishore Sharma constantly encouraged me to complete this thesis. I am extremely thankful to him for his continuous moral support.

As this thesis was nearing completion, an extremely painful tragedy occurred. A close friend and brilliant scholar, Mr Surendra Sharma, who had been throughout acting as a motive force for my pursuit in research, unfortunately met with a tragic end. Mr Sharma's in-depth knowledge in social theory and my regular discussions with him, helped to enrich my academic perspective. At this moment I extremely miss him with a grief-stricken heart.
My wife, Ms Santosh Tanwer, a Ph.D. research-scholar at J.N.U., has significantly contributed towards the completion of this study. I constantly discussed with her many a recurrent problems and her valuable suggestions gave consistent direction to this thesis. In fact, as the research work progressed, I read and re-read the whole draft to her. Her immense support and superb co-operation provided the necessary environment for the completion of this work. Towards the end, she did the laborious task of proof-reading and helped me in giving a final shape to the thesis. I owe her a deep sense of indebtedness and take this opportunity to thank her. In the passing, my loving thanks are due to my daughter Saguna who bravely bore the isolation imposed on her because of my constant involvement in this study.

I am extremely thankful to the Indian Council of Social Science Research, for providing financial assistance in the form of a short-term doctoral fellowship. Thanks are also due to the staff members of J.N.U. Library and Nehru Memorial Library for always extending the necessary help and co-operation.

Lastly, I am thankful to Mr Girish Ram who did the typing work with utmost care. He throughout displayed an immense patience and everready willingness in meticulously completing the typing assignment.

December 19, 1988
New Delhi

(GURCHAIN SINGH)