Acknowledgement

Writing the present thesis has been kind of a roller-coaster ride. There were many ups and downs, sometimes in quick successions. Sitting here at the end of the day I am tempted to say to myself that this is normal, that things happened the way they do. But looking back through the years I am humbled by the fact that things would never be the way it is now had it not been for some kind souls who took much pain to help me tide over the low moments. I am afraid words won’t convey the gratefulness and respect that I have for them. Nevertheless, being good souls I hope they would not mind my incompetence with words. First of all, I would like to express and convey my most sincere gratitude to my supervisor Dr. Vivek Kumar. Had it not been for his guidance and insistence the work would be rotting somewhere by now. I am also deeply grateful to him because many a times he overlooked my lack of courtesy and had done things which humbled me. I just want to say “Thank You, Sir” for all the prodding.

I would also like to thank all my loved and closed ones who have directly or indirectly helped me to successfully conclude the work. I would, in particular, like to thank my mother, sister. Sande (my wife) and Remeingam Marchang (my former roommate and friend) for their immense support and generosity. I would also like to thank the Centre For The Study Of Social Systems, Jawaharlal Nehru University, New Delhi, for the opportunity to pursue my research without any hindrances. Most of all my heartfelt gratitude goes to all those persons whose names I could not mentioned here due lack of space. Your suggestions, criticisms and reflections really made the difference.
