Acknowledgements

While at the verge of submitting the thesis I see myself completing a phase of my life before starting a new one and would like to fondly remember everyone who had been there for me in all these years.

Special thanks to my supervisor, Prof Susan Visvanathan for providing that rightful mix of encouragement and criticism that guided me in my persuasion of the academic work. Without her guidance in every single step I would never have been able to complete this thesis.

I would also like to thank Ishita for reading and correcting the draft even during her busy schedules, and to Urna and Boni for their encouragement whenever I felt dejected. For my friend Manjeer, thank you is perhaps too less a word to express my feelings. She not only gave a patient hearing to my woes from the field and read every single page that I have ever written, but also provided her valuable criticisms. The frequent debates that I had with her made my own understanding better and her belief in my abilities provided me the strength to work for these five long years.

I am grateful to my parents, especially my mother, for their unflinching support over the years and the freedom to do whatever I wanted. My sister, for her constant threat to finish her thesis before mine, and my brother who used to ask me for regular updates, all of which prompted me to finish this work. Sabya, for patiently bearing my tempers, nursing my illnesses and reading my drafts. Thank you dear, without your unwavering support and uncritical acceptance of all my idiosyncrasies I would never have been able to complete this.

My heartfelt gratitude to my in-laws for their love and support, who never made me aware of my household responsibilities and provided the space to complete my work. I would like to specially remember my father-in-law who wanted to see me with a doctoral degree. I regret that I couldn’t finish the work earlier, before he had to leave us.

The officials of KMDA also deserve special mention for their help with government documents and discussions on Kumartuli. Last but not the least I would like to thank all my respondents from Kumartuli, the numerous artists and artisans who gave their time and patiently provided me the details of their life. I will remain indebted to them forever and hope that I have been able to do justice while writing about them.
