I owe my immense gratitude to my supervisor Professor Ravi S. Srivastava for his constant guidance and unstinted support throughout – from conceptualization of research problem to comprehending it in a wider framework. I have learnt from him the research methodology, which helped me enormously to deepen my understanding of the subject. This work, however small, goes to his name.

My long and arduous field-work over three dozen villages in the Uttarakhand hills gave me opportunity to understand the problem and helped me to refine my research instruments. I have been benefited from discussions with numerous people in the villages that provided me the first hand information regarding the research problem.

I am indeed thankful to Shri Anup Karan, who has helped me immensely in data processing and conceptualizing the framework throughout my research work. I have been greatly benefited from his advice. I owe my special thanks to him for this.

I have also been enormously benefited from the comments of faculty of the Centre for the Study of Regional Development at the time of presentation of the results of my research work as a part of pre-submission of my thesis. These observations helped me to re-look at and synthesise the arguments.

I am thankful to my organization, the Institute of Applied Manpower Research (IAMR), for granting me study leave to complete my research work. I also express my sincere thanks to my friends – both from the Institute and outside – whose help and advice benefited me immensely.

I also thank the Indian Council of Social Science Research for providing financial support to me for conducting the field-work.

Finally, I am thankful to my wife Kamla, my son Bhartendu and my daughter Mansi for their constant support and bearing with me throughout this grueling journey. My son, who is an economist in his own right, has constantly updated my knowledge from whatever he has learnt in Delhi School of Economics.
