ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

First and foremost my thanks are due to my respected guru, Prof. Prakash C. Jain. To him my thanks are both profuse and profound. He has not only shown me the way but guided my steps all along.

My thanks are also due to Prof. Gulshan Dielt and Prof. Girijesh Pant for their immense support. I want to thank my senior Dr. Rushda Siddiqui for reading the manuscript and suggestions.

Israeli embassy staff helped me to have an access to some of the valuable material available at the embassy library in New Delhi. The synagogue authority at Lodhi Road, New Delhi enabled me to get knowledge about Judaism. They all deserve my thanks.

My family has sustained me and made it possible for me to write this text, specially my mother and father. To my partner in life, Dr. Vikram Sharma, I give very special thanks for his love and emotional support that I needed to complete my work. My little daughter did create distractions as any infant would do. She however, conferred ample de-stressing moments and increased my joy and strength to cope with the work.

I am also thankful to my in-laws for their support. My father-in-law, Prof. (Dr.) Kishori Lal in particular was a great source of intellectual sustenance.

It is not possible to recall and state here the names of all the functionaries and workers in different libraries in New Delhi who had been helpful to me in numerous ways. Though their names do not appear their support will always invoke my gratitude.
