ACKNOWLEDGEMENT

It is very difficult to write an acknowledgement when I know that there are innumerable people who have not only helped in writing this thesis but have simply believed in me, have made this journey with me and in the process have become a part of me. Their belief and confidence in me was enough to give the strength to walk that extra mile. Working on a PhD that is generally considered a lonely journey did not seem all that lonely. A part of the title of the thesis in a way was apt; it was the process of my 'social transformation' too.

My association with the Centre of Social Medicine and Community Health (CSMCH), JNU has been long and I thank the faculty of the Centre who provided with the direction and perspective essential to public health.

I am immensely grateful to my supervisors, Prof. Rama Baru and Dr. Rajib Dasgupta, for their invaluable insights in to this work. Without them this thesis would have remained incomplete. Dr Dasgupta was available whenever I needed to clarify any issue and gave important inputs that were turning points for this work. I thank him for the support and guidance throughout the process. No words can express the contribution made by Prof. Rama Baru to this work. She has been my supervisor since my MPhil days and has been with me through my highs and lows. She never let go of me and recognised that I needed to be held at times to shake away the anxieties that took over from time to time. She has given this thesis the much needed direction. In the last few years she has also given me numerous opportunities to write with her which helped build my confidence.

I thank the trustees, administrators, doctors at the hospitals who accepted to participate in the study and also the Directorate of Health Services in delivering the information I sought through the Right to Information. I am also grateful to the staff at Delhi Archives, Nehru Memorial Library and Jawaharlal Nehru University Library for helping me in my search for documents and books.

I thank Dinesh and Mr. Duraipandi at the CSMCH Documentation Unit for their support and allowing me to use the documentation unit as my work station. I especially thank Dinesh in providing me with documents and books from time to time and for always doing it with a smile. I thank the administrative staff at the Centre for all their help.
This thesis would have been incomplete without the support of my friends. I thank Jyotsna, Swati, Mita, Rama, Chris, Sandeep and Lalit. I would also like to thank Sanjeev, Nidhi and my brother Suman. I am indebted to them all for their continued support and love and for being there with me constantly in spite of physical distances at times. They provided me with strength, accepted me and my erratic ways, believed in me and never let go of me. I thank them for being there. They are family to me and will remain so.

I am immensely grateful to Dr Anurag Mishra who gave me time and space to articulate my anxieties and helped me deal with them by putting things in to perspective every now and then.

Didi and Vivek have been very supportive and made things comfortable for me. Their presence, constant support, prodding and love gave me enough strength to move on. My nephew Musu (Samyak) was born when I was yet to start my PhD and now as a school-going kid, he recognises the space I needed at times to do my work. He understood when I said I had to go to ‘school’ too and finish my ‘homework’ and he brightened many of my days with his antics.

Last but not the least, without Ma and Baba, this thesis would not have come in to existence. Their unconditional love, immense patience, support and encouragement gave me the strength to go on. At the end of the day I knew they were there for me. My being and existence is incomplete without them.

Ma, Baba...this is for you.
