ACKNOWLEDGMENTS

I am deeply indebted to Professor S.K. Agrawala, formerly Professor and Head, Department of Law, University of Poona, Vice-Chancellor, Agra University, Agra and presently Secretary, Association of Indian Universities, New Delhi, my teacher and guide, who kindled and channelised my interest in legal research. He has been a constant source of inspiration and encouragement to me in the completion of this dissertation on International Commercial Arbitration. I have been fortunate to receive from him continual stimulus kindness, guidance and supervision since I started this study. I have immensely benefitted from this experience. I take this opportunity to record my deepest gratitude and everlasting debt to him.

I also beholden to Dr. (Mrs.) Raj Kumari Agrawala, formerly Professor, and my teacher, Dr. C.J. Samuel, Professor and Head, Department of Law, University of Poona, and colleagues in the Department who have helped me in many ways in completing the dissertation.

Mr. Michael Ernest Schneider, who directed a course on 'Transnational Arbitration and State Contracts' at the Hague Academy of International Law in 1987, gave me an opportunity to have discussions with him during the group discussions and seminars enabling me to develop deeper insights in, and crystalise my ideas on, the problems relating to international commercial arbitration. I am extremely thankful to him.

I acknowledge with thanks the partial financial support given to me by the University Grants Commission (UGC), New Delhi, to pursue the research undertaking.

I gratefully acknowledge the valuable assistance received from the libraries of the University of Poona, Pune; the Indian Council of Arbitration, New Delhi; the Indian Society of International Law, New Delhi; the Indian Law Institute, New Delhi and the Jawaharlal Nehru University, New Delhi. The Library staff of The Hague Academy of International Law, The Hague (The Netherlands) and the United Nations Library at Geneva (Switzerland), permitted me the use of their collections. I record my gratefulness to them.

My wife, Bharati, my children Pinki and Banti and my younger brothers Bhagwan and Ashok suffered many privations during the period of this study. The dream of completion of this thesis would not have become a reality but for the love, affection and blessings of my parents. I could only offer the completion of this thesis as the recompense.
