Acknowledgements

Many people have encouraged and helped me in the completion of this thesis.

I am indebted to the Maharashtra State Government both for giving me formal permission to undertake this study and for granting me six months of study leave to collect the field data on which it is based.

A great deal of patience and sacrifice was necessary on the part of my family to allow me to live with this problem (for three years), in addition to my office work and responsibilities. Fortunately, we live in a society where the family can be taken for granted. Mention, however, should be made of the special debt I owe my husband for the hours spent in discussion and for the insightful, if rather disparaging, criticism.

I am especially grateful to Professor D.N. Dhanagare whose advice and guidance in writing the thesis has been most valuable. I have imposed on his time, often at short notice, and his smiling encouragement played an important part in helping me to complete the work.

Special thanks are also due to Shri R.C. Nand who devoted his spare-time to typing out the final draft of the thesis.

I must clarify that the views expressed in this study and the conclusions arrived at in it are entirely my own and do not commit the State Government in any way.