ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

RADHASWAMI

First and foremost thanks are due to my late grandfather Sri Purna Chandra Das, whose invaluable gift to me, Lal Behari Day’s Bengal Peasant Life, first drew my attention to the richness of nineteenth century Indian Writing in English, an area that is largely neglected in conventional academic curriculum. Because of the archival nature of my primary material, and the incidence of an interdisciplinary element in my approach, I have had to seek the counsel of people of diverse fields of study, all of whom I cannot name here individually.

I would like to thank Professor Jharna Sanyal, but for whose constant encouragement, untiring perseverance and sharp insights this thesis would not have been possible. I cannot spell out when and how she ceased to be just my teacher, and became my inspiration for striving for excellence, not only in this thesis, but in all I do.

I would like to express my gratitude to the staff of National Library, Kolkata, Central Library, University of Calcutta, the British Council Library, Kolkata, The Asiatic Society, Kolkata, Ramkrishna Mission Library Golpark, Kolkata, Uttarpara Joy Krishna Public Library, and Bangiya Sahitya Parishad, Kolkata, for cooperating with me throughout my research work.

I also want to express my gratitude to British Library and India Office Library, London for their prompt correspondence to all my queries and their speedy service whenever I accessed them for primary material. I also want to acknowledge the immense service I received from several digital archives such as Questia Online Library, The Digital Library of India, Cambridge Library Online and Oxford Digital Library.
I take this opportunity to thank my colleagues Chaiti Mitra and Gargi Gangopadhyay, who have not only cooperated with me in many ways, but also provided the much needed occasional impetus.

Creative and intellectual faculty can only flourish in a nourishing familial/domestic environment, but this immediate context of one's creativity appears only in the margins of print. I would have felt fortunate if I were able to complete this thesis in the lifetime of my late father-in-law, Sri. Aniruddha Sengupta, who would have been a very proud man today. I am sure his blessings are always with me. I feel obliged to thank my mother-in-law, Smt. Jayasri Sengupta for her constant and sincere support in all my academic endeavours.

In this moment of accomplishment I fondly recall the sweet memories of my late grandfather Sri Santosh Kumar Ghosh, my first English teacher, with whom I sharpened my English skills, and developed an affinity with the language, even as a child. For her tireless motivation and inspiration I feel indebted to my mother, Smt. Tandra Das who believes in me more than I do myself. I feel more thankful than words can ever convey, to my father Dr. Achintya Ranjan Das, who read the entire manuscript with astute and affectionate attention to each detail, providing me the benefit of his close readings. Even when we disagreed on some matters, I stood to gain immensely. I have freely drawn on his splendid knowledge on diverse subjects. I would like to thank Saptarshi and Subhashree, for their cheerful support. My dear brother Saptarshi procured for me some of the most invaluable primary materials, which are an essential part of this thesis. Finally, but most essentially, I must mention the name of my loving husband, Abhinaba, whose camaraderie is the source of my sustenance. He helped me in innumerous, unrecountable ways, both concrete and abstract, ranging from intellectual stimulation to taking care of everyday responsibilities. He not only motivated me whenever I needed it most, but also supported me in countless big and small matters.
