I am greatly indebted to my guide Dr. P.K. Bhowmick, Professor and Head of the Department of Anthropology, Calcutta University for suggesting this original topic of current interest in the context of changing strategies of tribal development in the country. He has been a constant source of inspiration in the preparation of the thesis. But for his valuable suggestions and expert guidance it would have been impossible for me to complete this work.

My grateful thanks are due to those tribal respondents who could bear with the elaborate interviews and discussions I held with them in the course of my field work in tribal Adilabad. But for their enthusiastic cooperation the data collection would not have been successful.

I am thankful to the district officers for their willing cooperation in providing the necessary secondary data, especially in culling out the information from old records of 1940's. I am also grateful to Government of Andhra Pradesh for having permitted me to use the records of Archives and the Board of Revenue for this work.

My thanks are also due to Mr. Rajeshwari Pershad and Mr. Abdul Kareem for neatly typing the work, that too within a short time.

I declare that this thesis is entirely original and has not been submitted in full or in parts for any research degree of any University.
