Acknowledgements

In carrying out this research, I have received invaluable help from many scholars and individuals. While I acknowledge my gratitude to all of them, a special mention must be made of a few. First of all, I thank my supervisor Prof. Jayati Ghosh for academic inputs, critical comments and for granting me the much needed freedom to carry out the research at my stride and pace. I have immensely benefited from countless discussions with her and several rounds of reading and commenting on the drafts.

I thank Prof. Irudaya Rajan at the Centre for Development Studies (CDS), Thiruvananthapuram, for showing keen interest in my academic endeavors over the years. He was always available to seek clarifications, preserving the warmth of a former teacher. I also acknowledge the constructive discussions I had with Professors D. Narayana and K.P. Kannan and clarifications provided by Dr. Vinoj Abraham of CDS. Thanks are also due to Prof. Michael Tharan, University of Kannur and Prof. Mridul Lapen and Dr. K.N. Harilal, members of the State Planning Board, Kerala. I have benefited immensely from the interaction with Prof. Arjun Sengupta who was always concerned about the progress of my research.

I received support and co-operation from many scholars and individuals during my field work in Kerala. I specially acknowledge the help provided by Prof. Prabhat Patnaik and Anijan of State Planning Board, Kerala. Maniram helped in locating documents which were indispensable to my study and also provided crucial contacts. His knowledge regarding the working of education sector in Kerala enriched me with greater clarity. I also acknowledge the inspiring discussion I had with Prof. G. Jayasankar and other office bearers of various private self-financing engineering colleges in Kerala. Thanks are also due to the library staff at JNU, National Institute of Public Finance and Policy, New Delhi, CDS library, Kerala State Legislative Library, Kerala State Planning Board Library and Kerala University College Library. It would have been definitely difficult to pursue this study, without the doctoral fellowship granted by the Indian Council for Social Science Research and later by the University Grants Commission. Special thanks are also due to Prof. Jayati Ghosh for arranging funds for my field trip. I also thank all faculty members and administrative staff of Centre for Economic Studies and Planning, JNU especially Bishtiji for their kind support.

It would be too formal on my part, if I make an attempt to thank my friends, who have stood by me all throughout the work. Especially, friendship and emotional support provided by Saji is something beyond words. My life in JNU would have been undoubtedly less lively and memorable without the company of Sunita and Anish. Komath deserves special mention for all that he has done out of his way to facilitate my research. Annis and Sanyogita provided the much needed emotional support and understanding, which were essential to keep my cool, though I lost it many times, in the final stage of the thesis. I am indebted to Uma for meticulously editing the manuscript, apart from her warm company. Rathikanta, Swati and Archana took the pain to read and comment on many chapters, which made the draft readable. I also acknowledge the help rendered by Sandeep, Shannu, Partho, Sabitha, Shalini, Silpa, Prasanth and Mohan. On several occasions Himanshu, Sona and Surojit provided clarification on data related queries. Moushumi Basu was a source of support and encouragement. Friendship of Nitu, Reji, Poornima, Vinayan, Karmegam, Guna and Subir Sen were very special.

Above all, I remain grateful to my family, to the loving memories of my late father, for the enduring affection and understanding of my mother and brother, especially for the confidence they have bestowed on me.
