Acknowledgements

Putting together a PhD is indeed a difficult task. I am now inclined to believe that the length of acknowledgements is directly proportional to the size of one's thesis! At the very outset, I would like to thank my supervisor, Prof Niraja Gopal Jayal who has constantly prodded, encouraged and urged me to pursue this study in addition to firmly believing that the project I had undertaken was indeed worthwhile. Prof CP Bhambhri continually reminded me that time was running out for which I am grateful. I have also benefited from discussions with my colleagues, friends and researchers who also share my passion for the mountains. In January 2003, I attended a course on Conservation Biology in the North Eastern Hill States. Discussions with resource persons like Nakul Chhettri and T Ganesh helped me view the problem of deforestation in the Himalayas from a different angle. I am also grateful to Sameer Zuhad of CBED for inviting me for the International Symposium on Mountain Farming that gave me occasion to refine my views on the problems of employment generation in hill states. The University Grants Commission provided me with enabling financial assistance until 2000; thereafter I was fortunate enough to be awarded the Nehru Memorial Fellowship to complete my Doctoral studies.

A study that is primarily field oriented cannot overlook the contributions of the many individuals interviewed in the process. I would like to thank the organisers of the first JNU-University of Salzburg field trip to Gangotri especially Gaby, Thomas and Shahnawaz for introducing me to the wonders of the high Himalayas. Capt MS Kohli of the Himalayan Environment Trust and Lt Gen Sushil Kumar of the Gangotri Conservation Project made subsequent field trips possible by generously sponsoring my accommodation and travel. Rabinder Bhuyan, Chief Warden of the GCP enthusiastically took me under his charge and even offered to give me a lift to Gangotri on his scooter (fortunately, I did not have to face that eventuality!). Gangotri township was extremely kind and patient with me: Swami Viyoganand Saraswati, the indulgent patriarch of the ashram where I stayed tried on several occasions to convert me to monkhood (that I was able resist), Pandit Ashok Semwal shared candid details of the politics in the region and Salesh Semwal introduced me to many cave dwelling savants tucked away in the foliage whom I would have otherwise ignored. Swami Brahmatanya, who spoke of himself in the third person, was a mine of valuable information as was Nandlal Tantia (who I later discovered was a millionaire turned recluse). I am at a loss for words in describing the affection bestowed on me by Draupadi ma, my 78 year old roommate who pampered my palate by feeding me delicacies in freezing Gangotri. To Vijay Awasthi, my field assistant, I owe an enormous debt of gratitude. His opinions were extremely useful and unblemished of any malice or spite. Preg Bahadur, the overseer of a plantation at Bhojbas amazed me by the amount he knew about Botany and Ecology. Dr Harshwanti Bisht, a former mountaineer, willingly shared her experiences on Bhojpatra plantations in Gangotri.

Back in Delhi, the libraries of Teen Murti House, Central Secretariat, Institute of Economic Growth (Delhi University), Jawaharlal Nehru University, the Food Corporation of India and the Indian Mountaineering Federation were storehouses of primary and secondary data. I took the able assistance of M/S MK Ramaswamy, S Sundara Rajan, R Nayyar, AK Samal and Vimin Arora of the Food Corporation of India in generating a database and compiling my data. My father's staff: L Sriram, Chander Shekhar, Hema, Subhas, Lal Singh, Bharat Singh, Jile Singh and Gopichand not only tolerated my tantrums each time my world would collapse, but also ensured that order was miraculously restored.

Friends helped me by providing me with the much needed moral support each time I was ready to give up. I thank Christopher for being one of my loudest cheerleaders; Julie for painstakingly going through the manuscript and making editorial corrections that would have otherwise escaped me; Maneck for being the patient friend and reliable trouble shooter. Ahmed took over the role of being my genie; Aseem provided me with an article I had overlooked; Shreya Pillai came to interview me for a project on developing ecotourism in Uttarakhand, left as a friend. I also benefited greatly from our discussions. Luke and Phoebe heeded to my 'panic-calls' with patience and spontaneity natural among friends. Fergus provided me with the tremendous faith, encouragement and intellectual criticism (even though his interest waned after Chapter 3!) without which the thesis would not have acquired the present form. My family, ever indulgent, ever supportive, always loving has stood by me through my academic career and pulled me out of emotional eddies and stress... but for them, this study would have remained a dream.
