
The behavioural aspect of public law and constitutional politics had been long neglected by the Indian scholars while, in the U.S.A., there had been a plethora of works on this subject, in the wake of Behavioural Revolution, owing mainly to the pioneering effort by Professor C. Herman Pritchett, David J. Danelski, Joel B. Grossman, Joseph Tanenhaus, Sidney Ulmer, Walter Murphy, Stuart Nagel and others, who not only went beyond the confines of Pritchett, but developed highly sophisticated models for the study of this unexplored field in the American context. While the study of Indian judiciary in the behavioural perspective continued to escape the attention of Indian scholars who were oriented by the 'constitutional law' approach in the traditional mould, it was left to an American specialist, George H. Gadbois Jr., to apply these new models and techniques to the study of Indian judiciary and thus set a new pathbreaking trend that has inspired the new generation of Indian scholars with a fresh motivation for such studies, despite of severe constraints and handicaps.

The present study, apart from treating the Supreme Court from the institutional perspective, as a judicial system with all the systemic components and characteristics, is an humble attempt to explore some unexplored and novel (in the Indian setting) dimensions of judicial behaviour and judicial decision-making of the highest tribunal in the Indian Political system. This study has been conducted through the survey method to supplement the data collected from the Law Reports regarding the judgements of the Indian Supreme Court in the field of Fundamental Rights guaranteed by the Constitution. Particular attention has been paid to the determination of the patterns and directions of the behaviour of the individual Judges as evidenced from their voting records, whether they are liberal or conservative, in the traditional and the modern senses, or activist or self-restrained. The influence of such invisible factors as political parties and pressure groups, and the impact of the Chief Justice's role, on the making of judicial decisions, has been studied with deep care and insight, with the help of the above models applied by the American scholars.

I must acknowledge my sincere gratefulness to my respected teacher and supervisor, Dr. S. N. Ray, Professor and Head of the Department of Political Science, University of North Bengal, for his assistance and invaluable guidance for carrying on the research work.

I wish to express my debt of gratitude to the leading experts in the field of my study. A special note of thanks must be given to Dr. George H. Gadbois, Jr., Associate Professor of Political Science, University of Kentucky, U.S.A., for his assistance right from the beginning of the study. I am also grateful to him for his valuable advice rendered from time to time and for enlightening me about the subject and creating an interest in it at the initial period by sending many offsprings of his publication which were very valuable for me.

I am also thankful to Prof. Glendon Schubert, Professor of Political Science at the University of Hawaii, who also sent me many valuable suggestions and a copy of his recently published book. A special acknowledgement is due to Dr. David J. Danelski, Goldwin Smith Professor of Government at the Cornell University, U.S.A. for his valuable suggestions.

I am equally grateful to Dr. G. RamReddy, Vice-Chancellor, Osmania University, Hyderabad, Dr. B.N. Mukherjee, Joint Director of Research, Council for Social Development, New Delhi and to Mr. Mukul Gopal Mukherjee, senior advocate Calcutta High Court and Supreme Court of India for their valuable suggestions and council in different phases of this research.

I express my lasting and immesurable debt of gratitude to the honourable Judges of the Supreme Court of India, both retired and sitting, who, inspite of their very tight schedule of programmes, quickly responded to my request and spared their precious time to reply to my questionnaire. I am particularly thankful to Hon'ble M. Hidayatullah, formerly Chief Justice of India and presently, Vice-President of India. I am also grateful to the Indian Council of Social Science Research, New Delhi and to the National Institute of Community (Rural) Development, Hyderabad, where I got the opportunity of training in research methodology. I am also thankful to my parent University where also I got the same opportunity to train myself in research methods.

I am immensely grateful to the Librarian and Staff of the Central Library, University of North Bengal, American Library, Calcutta and New Delhi, National Institute of Rural Development Library, Hyderabad, Osmania University, Hyderabad, American Studies Research Center, Hyderabad, Indian Law Institute Library, New Delhi, Indian Council of World Affairs Library, New Delhi, India International Center Library, New Delhi, from whom I received all kinds of co-operation and ungrudging service.

I must acknowledge the assistance rendered by the Registrar of the Supreme Court of India who supplied the address of the Justices, which was immensely useful for communication with the Judges.

Finally, I acknowledge the inspiration that I received from my family members and close friends, my colleagues and respected teachers in the Department who helped me to complete the research work. I also acknowledge my debt of gratitude to all of them who were directly or indirectly helpful for the completion of the study.
