ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

Acknowledgements are due to:

- my supervisor, Dr.(Mrs.) Atiya Habeeb Kidwai, not only for her persistent supervision but also for her patient bearing with the 'problem child'. Without her constant encouragement in the face of many personal trials and tribulations during the course of the study, the thesis would not have seen the light of the day. I totally owe this thesis to her. Of course, the usual absolution applies.

- Prof. Moonis Raza, previously the Chairman of the Centre and currently the Vice-Chancellor of Delhi University, for his very personal interest in me without which it would not have been physically possible for me to enter the University and stay here this long.

- a host of luminaries and academics of Nepal including M.C. Regmi, Govind P. Lohani, Harka Gurung, Pitamber Sharma, V.B.S. Kansakar, Devendra R. Pandey, Sriram Poudyal, Deependra B. Chhetri & Bharat Devkota for their multi-faceted help.

- the Indian Council for Social Science Research for granting a Junior Research Fellowship.

- my colleagues Y.K. Parajuli, Manu Bhatnagar, Golak Kandewal, Bishnu D. Pant, Madhav Devkota, K.K. Maharjan, Baburam Shrestha, Purusottam Shrestha, Tilak and others for their assistance at different stages of the work.

- Talwar, Santosh, Chander and Sachdeva for prompt typing.

- activists of All India Nepalese Unity Society and emigrant Nepalese workers in India for providing a perspective of the need to step out of the narrow confines of the academics 'occupied with mere 'interpretation' of the world and get involved in 'changing' it as well.

- little 'Manus', who lived only 31 hours in this world, for providing a first hand 'feel' of the "underdevelopment" I was enquiring into.

The usual 'last but not the least' acknowledgement would have been recorded in favour of Ms. Hisila Yami for her contribution to this work more than my own, but for her warning not to ritualize a relation that defies words. I abide by her wishes.
