ACKNOWLEDGEMENT

My quest “to strive, to seek, to find, and not to yield”- would have come to an abrupt halt if, in this long and laborious journey of my thesis writing, I were not helped by them. Now as I am standing on the verge of the completion of my task, I would like to express my gratitude towards them for their unconditional help and constant support.

Let me confess that this seemingly impossible task of completing my doctoral dissertation would not have been possible, if I were not fortunate enough to have Prof. Sanjukta Dasgupta (Professor, Department of English, Calcutta University) as my supervisor. Besides being an excellent teacher, Prof. Dasgupta is also a fabulous person and I would like to express my deepest regard and gratitude to her for her warm support and cooperation. She has always been a source of inspiration for me. I am also deeply indebted to all the Faculty and Staff members of the English Department of Calcutta University as they have been extremely supportive.

Words are, perhaps, inadequate to express my heartfelt gratitude to Prof. Pramod Nair and Prof. Suneetha Rani (Department of English, University of Hyderabad Hyderabad, India) who helped me immensely not only by allowing me to have access to the materials in the Departmental and the Central Library, but also by sharing with me their scholarly ideas and thoughtful suggestions. I am truly touched by their affection and words of encouragement. I would also like to take this opportunity to thank all the staff of the Central University of Hyderabad for their genuine cooperation. Likewise, I am also grateful to the members of the EFLU Library (Hyderabad) and the Anveshi Research Centre (Hyderabad) for allowing me to use their Libraries and photocopy materials. A gesture of gratitude must be extended to the faculty and the staff members of the Vidyasagar University, West Bengal. I am thankful to them for their generosity and kind assistance. A good number of my days were spent in the sprawling campus of the National Library, Kolkata and also within the heritage-smacked, huge rooms of the Central Library of Calcutta University. My dissertation owes a lot to them. I thank all the members for their cooperation.

Could this project be possible without the help of Dalit writers and activists? Perhaps not. I am extremely indebted to research scholar Om whom I met at the University of Hyderabad. Om helped me understand how caste defines one’s identity. I am truly grateful to him. Likewise, I am also indebted to a host of Bengali Dalit writers who opened my eyes to the entire gamut of Bangla Dalit writing which despite possessing a rich tradition of its own has always been ignored by the mainstream. I am genuinely thankful to Kalyani Thakur, Manju Bala, Manohar Mouli Biswas, Raju Das and Namita Das for their love, affection and unconditional support. In spite of being busy with their hectic writing schedules and familial responsibilities they always welcomed me whenever I wished to meet them. I am also grateful to the award-winning Dalit writer Manoranjjan Byapari for accepting my request for a short, informal interview.

However, a research project requires time. My doctoral project would have been ruined if the Management body of my college (Royal Thimphu College, Bhutan) had not been kind and supportive. I am hugely indebted to them for allowing me to have a six-month study break without which the enormous task of writing my dissertation would surely have been an impossible dream. I am also grateful to my Program Leader and other members of the English Faculty for helping me to focus on my doctoral project. I am also thankful to my students. They have been a constant source of inspiration to me.
I am also grateful to Dr. Heinz Werner Wessler (Professor, Uppsala University, Sweden) for his scholarly suggestions and wise advice. My ideas about Hindi Dalit autobiographies could not have been refined without those inputs which I received from Heinz.

My deepest regard goes to Dr. Matthew Belmonte (Nottingham Trent University, UK) for being a great source of support. I am thankful to him for providing me with rare books and restricted web articles.

My days of self-doubt and intellectual barrenness could have delayed this project further if I were not fortunate to have a friend like Jason. His patience, diligence and insatiable hunger for knowledge motivated me to complete my task.

Last but not the least; I am deeply indebted to my parents and to my elder sister for encouraging me to finish this project within the stipulated period.

However, I know that this ‘acknowledgement’ is still incomplete as I could not express my gratitude to all my teachers, colleagues and friends who helped me develop a critical mind and an analytical perspective. I sincerely regret for this unwilling omission. Without them, I would not have been what I am today!

I thank them all.
