I am greatly indebted to a large number of people in the writing of my thesis. Special thanks are due to the staff of the offices and libraries of the Chief Commissioner, Ambala, and the Deputy Commissioners of Rohtak, Gurgaon and Ambala, Library and Record Section of the National Archives of India, the Nehru Memorial Museum and Library, libraries of the Haryana and Punjab Secretariat, the Haryana State Archives, the Chief Secretariat Library, Delhi, the Ratan Tata Library, Delhi School of Economics, libraries of the Miranda House, Indian Council of Historical Research, and Indian Council of Social Science Research, the India Office Library, the British Museum and Library, the library of the School of Oriental and African Studies, London, Newspapers Library, Colindale, the Public Record Office, London, the Bodleian Library, Oxford, the South Asian Centre, Cambridge, and the Cambridge University Library.

I feel deeply obliged to the British Council, the University Grants Commission and the Indian Council of Historical Research for providing me with travel and maintenance grant to do field work in the United Kingdom. The financial assistance extended by them enabled me to consult some of the most important and basic source material without which this study would have certainly remained deficient in its interpretation and portrayal of the period and its personalities.

My special thanks are due to Mr. Azim Hussain and to Mr. A.H. Batalvi, both of whom supplied me with their private papers and several references and extended me the courtesy and facility of hours of discussion; to all the ex-civilians of Punjab in the United Kingdom as well as in India, who unstintingly spared their valuable time for interviews at my convenience; to Professor T.G.P. Spear, Professor Eric Stokes, Dr. Clive Dewey, Dr. David Page and Dr. Anand Chakravarti, for discussing certain aspects of my project with special reference to 'Jats' and also for drawing my attention to still untapped materials.

I feel a personal sense of gratitude to Mr. Vijya Narayan Seth who most willingly undertook the onerous responsibility of seeing the entire work connected with my thesis through to its final type-script stages; to the invaluable help of Mian Salim Osama, my Urdu teacher, whose patience in teaching is indeed remarkable; to Pandit Sri Ram Sharma who allowed me to consult his collection of the Haryana Tilak; to my father who, with his profound knowledge of men and matters, greatly helped me in understanding this period and in my getting access to some of the otherwise inaccessible source material. It is a matter of regret to me that he remains in disagreement with the basic thrust of my analysis and conclusions.

My greatest debt of course remains to Professor Bipan Chandra. I consider myself very fortunate in having him as my teacher at the post graduate level and now as my research supervisor. His constant encouragement punctuated with critical advice alone made this work possible.

I wish to thank my College for providing me with study leave and the Indian Council of Historical Research for providing me with a contingency grant which has enabled me to meet the expenses incurred in the writing of this thesis. My thanks are also due to Mr. Ajmani for typing the final draft of this thesis. Lastly, I wish to acknowledge the help of many kind friends and members of my family who remain unnamed but who surely know how valuable they had proved during the various stages of my work.

New Delhi 1979

Prem Chowdhry