Acknowledgement

A creation, academic or otherwise, is seldom an individual effort. What seems to be an untrilling endeavour by the researcher, spread across long days and sleepless nights is actually a culmination of the hard work done, and generous help extended, by all those who choose to remain behind the veil. And this acknowledgement, more than an academic norm, is an attempt to unveil the kind heartedness of those who made this dissertation a reality.

To begin with I am thankful to the Department of History, University of Calcutta, for providing me with the institutional affiliation and support, in every possible way, making it possible to carry on with my work. I remain grateful to my supervisor Dr. Amit Dey without whose relentless efforts and meticulous supervision this work would not achieved the form it has today. His invaluable suggestions and irreplaceable comments have added to the thesis what a dozen libraries could not. Mere thanks can never do justice.

I remain indebted to all my teachers Rajat Kanta Ray, Subhas Ranjan Chakrabarty, Bhaskar Chakrabarty, Shireen Maswood and Suranjan Das. I have been fortunate to receive numerous suggestions in course of my research, both from peers and professors alike – Ramakanta Chakrabarty, Arun Bandopadhyay, Suparna Gooptu, Sanjukta Dasgupta, Rajsekhar Basu, Suchandra Ghosh, Bishnupriya Basak, Raziuddin Aquil, Dilip Kumar Mohanto, Joya Chatterji, Farhat Hassan and Scott Kugle. I have always benifitted from their experience in the field.

Bruce Lawrence and Carl Ernst – two doyens in the field of south Asian Sufism – have been extremely generous to extend their help and guidance whenever I approached them over emails. No amount of thanks is enough for their kindness towards someone whom they have never met in their life. Richard Maxwell Eaton – whose numerous writings on south Asian Sufism has been an inspiration since my college days – always had the time and patience to listen to whatever naïve I had to say on the subject, and extend his thoughts and insights, many of which have been crucial in shaping up the thesis. I also remain grateful to Tony Stewart and Arthur Buehler for sharing with me their experiences of researching on Sufism in south Asia.

Samita Sen – under whom I was fortunate to study and, after that, work as her editorial assistant – has always been a strong pillar of guidance and support throughout these difficult years of research. Things that I have learnt from her – academic and professional – are too valuable to be thanked for. I remain grateful to her for being so understanding and affectionate.

Training in the Islamic languages has been an inseparable part of this research. Whatever knowledge I have gained and applied in this field owes its origins to the hard work and patience of Zabihur Rahman Atique (Arabic, Urdu), Shahid Jamil (Persian), Mahmud Alam (Persian), Shabbir Ahmad (Urdu) and Aquil Ahmad Aquil (Persian, Urdu).

In the course of my archival and field work I had the opportunity of accessing many libraries both in Kolkata and beyond – the National Library (Kolkata), the Asiatic Society (Kolkata), the Calcutta University Central Library (Kolkata), the Calcutta University Library (Alipore Campus, Kolkata), the Centre for Studies in Social Sciences Calcutta Library (Kolkata), the Ramakrishna Mission Institute of Culture Library (Golpark, Kolkata), the Presidency College Library (Kolkata), the Nehru Memorial Museum Library (New Delhi), the Jawaharlal Nehru University Central Library (New Delhi), the Jamia Millia Islamia University Library (New Delhi), the Dhaka University Library (Dhaka), the Asiatic Society (Dhaka). Carrying out research work in these libraries would not have been possible without the active help and cooperation from their staff.
My seniors, from college and university, have been an unending source of support and I sincerely thank Kingshuk Chatterjee, Bodhisattwa Kar, Jishnu DasGupta, Riddhi Sankar Ray, Phalguni Ghosh, Rohan Deb Roy, Soumen Mukherjee, Somdatta Chakraborty, Suranjana Ganguly for their help and guidance.

Sraman Mukherjee has been a perennial source of encouragement and delight, ever happy to lend his support — in crisis and company.

Arka Mukherjee and Pragya Paramita Ghosh — my dear friends from good old college days — have been wonderful sources of distraction and pleasure just when the boredom of research seemed to close in.

It is always difficult to write appropriate words about your oldest and dearest friend — Atig Ghosh — life without whom would never have been the same. Right from our school days we have always been there for each other, and I have had the good fortune of learning much from him without being able to thank enough.

Pratyay Nath — a passionate and aspiring medievalist, together with Santanu Sengupta, Upal Chakrabarty, Sukanya Sarbadhikary and Shinjini Das — all younger than me, but their help has been immeasurable in shaping up this research in many ways than one.

Soma Mukherjee has been the most patient and delightful host, never losing her smile in the face of numerous incursions by this scholar at her residence, at times in odd hours. Teesta and Paushali, extremely adorable as they are, proved to be bundles of joy.

Kamal Nizami and his family, for generations has been a family friend and a devoted khadim at the Nizamuddin dargah, deserves a special thanks for providing access to places and resources, that has enriched this work manifold.

On the personal front, Arshad Amin, my elder brother, and his wife Rebecca Haque, deserve my deepest gratitude for making my stay at Dhaka an unforgettable experience, and my research at the university, lot easier and worthwhile. Their generosity lies beyond the realm of description.

My sister, Kashfi Ghani and her husband Farukh Ahammad, live and work outside – catering to the hazards of a globalised world. But distance has never been an impediment to the unconditional support and unending love they shower on this youngest member of the family.

Parents are like the great banyan tree whose deep roots and wide shade always provide a degree of assurance and comfort, so that their children may flourish in their own course. I do not know whether I will ever be able to account for all the pains my parents sustained only to keep them away from me. This thesis, drawing its inspiration from my father’s lifelong scholarship and unflinching commitment to Islamic studies, is a humble dedication to my parents who made me worthy of this honour.
