Acknowledgement

After completing the writing of the whole thesis, it's surprising that I find writing this part so difficult. But yes it is, for the journey has been long and almost every person around me, known -unknown, at each step appears to have left at/east some impact on me and thus, contributed to this work. Hence, my acknowledgements would attempt best to cover at/east those whom I directly can point out as contributors to this work in their own unique unmatched ways.

I start with the acknowledgement due to the person who not only guided me through the entire learning process during my study at JNU but also was patiently always by my side in my hyper or depressing moments. I am attempting to show my gratitude and sincere thanks to my guide Professor K. R. Nayar. It's his unselfish trust and belief in me that could pull me through the entire endless seeming tunnel to finally see this dawn of final submission of my PhD thesis.

My parents who could muster that much courage to sent me away from home this far to pursue my studies and were always there, ignoring their own happiness, sacrificing everything they thought can provide me even a bit of happiness, who are so weak yet they become my strength. They provided me every possible support that could help me achieve my goals and make their daughter, in a patriarchal society, see through this world with a critical angle. I do hope that this work brings at/east a smile on their faces. My sincere thanks are equally due to my younger sister Dr. Meeta Garg, who did an outstanding work in her PhD recently awarded, and to my younger brother Mr. Vishal Garg for being the best siblings.

My life changed completely and got newer, much more meaningful dimensions to it, when I met my husband Navin. I have been passing through a very bad phase of my life when he appeared and extended his warm loving hands to lift me up and place me again on a much smoother track of life. He since then carried me minimizing all the bumps in my way and is the one who could give me that little push which I very much needed to complete my much invested work of PhD. He is the husband who makes me feel empowered and appreciate the actual dimensions of the term ‘empowerment’ myself before I set out to attempt the research work on this topic.

My special thanks are due to my father in law, Professor Mithilesh Kumar Singh, who fought against the most difficult odds of caste system and the typical patriarchal system to accept me socially as his daughter-in-law. He wished to see me finish my PhD before he completes his. It’s his blessings and hope from me that I could write the whole work. I do hope this work makes him proud and happy. Coming this late in the acknowledgement list but actually one of the strongest women I have come across in my life is my mother-in-law, Mrs. Ambika Devi. She is the woman who breaks the myth that education alone can empower women. Being completely illiterate, living in the most conservative societies of India- Bihar and herself being a mother of four daughters, two still to be married off, she could fight against her own ingrained belief systems as well. as the much imposed caste and patriarchal society's stated norms to finally grant me the status of her daughter-in-law. She may not have ever gone to a school herself but she wished me to complete my PhD.
No matter what she was going through in her life, she always kept the brave face up inspiring me, motivating me and instructing me to complete my thesis work. Ma I do hope that when I will read out this work to you, you will have no regrets of the price you paid for accepting me. I do wish to thank all my four sister-in-laws and brother-in-laws for placing their belief and trust in me, for appreciating my work and giving me their wishes and moral support.

My list of acknowledgements include Mr. Ganesh Pandey, Convenor and founder of Shramik Bharti; Mrs.
Usha Varkey, another founder and an active worker of Shramik Bharti; Mr. Rakesh Pandey, son of Mr.
Ganesh Pandey and a solid pillar of the organization working as the I/C Finance; Mr. Jayant Upadhyay (he joined CARE sometime back) and Mrs. Sadhana Ghosh, two most important functionaries at Shramik Bharti who work mainly for all kinds of health programmes; and the whole office staff as well as the untiring and dedicated field team. I appreciate their working spirit due to which they have taken up the most difficult work in their hands of serving the disadvantageous people – poor and the women. Some flicker of hope that the poor women in the study areas showed in their eyes is much the result of the sincere attempts made by this dedicated team of people. They fill you with the same spirit if you come in their contact and so I wish their contagion may continue to thrive and spread as much as possible.

Though I may continue to thank endlessly, I wish to stop at this point on expressing my heartfelt gratitude and appreciation for all the poor women in the rural areas of Kanpur who have been the subjects of the present research work. Not knowing what this research reflects on their daring spirits, they will be still there in their villages, walking long distances to attend the group meetings, speaking out their points and trying to prove their priorities for getting small loan amounts, which they will take home and do some small works in hope of contributing to the well being and happiness of their families. May their renewed confidence take them far ahead on this hope road and they do feel and get empowered in the true sense of the term. Also I do pray and request our development planners and implementers not to make them escape goats in yet another attempt of developing them.

Deepa Navin