ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

To be a researcher, one needs quite a few qualities such as the ability to think critically, question and be persistent in these endeavors. I take this opportunity to thank Ardhendu Sekhar Chatterjee, who as a mentor sowed the seeds of research in me at a very young age. I am also really thankful to Development Research Communication and Services Centre (DRCSC) for providing me with the opportunity to work and experience the real challenges regarding environmental and development issues in different corners of West Bengal. I would also like to extend my gratitude to Sujit Mitra for his early guidance in this journey where I really learnt a lot about the human—environment engagement which later served as the bedrock of inspiration for this research. Moreover, without the support of DRCSC and Indraprastha Srijan Welfare Society, my field research would not have been so smooth. I am really grateful to all of them who have helped me during my field research in terms of making my stay a comfortable one, helping me to move around in the villages, and by sharing their life-stories for this dissertation.

This research would not have been possible without the institutional support of Manipal Centre for Philosophy and Humanities, one of the very few places in India where this kind of interdisciplinary research is encouraged and supported. I am also profusely indebted to my guide Prof. Meera Baiindur, who supported me unconditionally and kept faith in me, a gesture that gave me confidence about my own self. I am really thankful to her for remaining beside me all along this journey. I am obliged to Prof. Apaar Kumar, Prof. Sundar Sarukkai, Prof. Mrinal Kaul and Prof. Kaveri Haritas. All of them have provided me with critical comments from different perspectives that have helped me improve my dissertation, they have also offered me their generous support whenever it was required. I am immensely grateful to both the external reviewers for their detailed comments on the dissertation. I thank Sharmada, Aivin, Madhava, and Sanghamitra for copy-editing different portions of the dissertation, as at times, editing a dissertation becomes a more daunting task than writing it.

I am thankful to my friends Sharmada, Aivin, Sonia, Tapaswi, and Ann, for making my stay at Manipal a memorable one. I cannot imagine having reached so far without the support of my family—my in-laws and parents. All of them have provided me the necessary space and time which were absolutely instrumental to complete this research. They also gave me the freedom to choose this path and pursue it wholeheartedly. This acknowledgement would not be complete without extending my gratitude to my husband, Soumyajit, who was beside me all along and keep his faith in me, even when I repeatedly faltered he kept by my side to make this dissertation a reality.
