I would like to remember some people who have been instrumental in providing me support, directly and indirectly in writing this thesis. The contributions made by these special people are immense and words aren’t enough to express my gratitude towards them. I would therefore like to flip the pages of time backwards and remember all those who have helped me in accomplishing this task…….

First and foremost, my constant positive inspiration and strength came from the blessings of the Almighty. My paternal and maternal grandparents who are no more, but who have had a deep impact on my life seemed to have provided the spiritual strength and courage to think positively in life. I am indebted to them for the ‘inner’ strength they provided me with.

I would like to thank the department of sociology and all my esteemed teachers who have helped me love sociology. The discipline of sociology has been instrumental in guiding this research.

I am deeply indebted to my supervisor, Dr. Maitrayee Chaudhuri, who has helped me through thick and thin in the course of this research. She has been extremely patient, understanding and helpful at every step of my work and has made me understand this subject like no one ever has.

My family and friends have stood by me through my thesis and I am indebted to each one of them because each of them made a special contribution towards my thesis and this contribution was in the form of unstinted support and warmth. My parents, without whose support this thesis would not be possible. My mother who has been a great source of inspiration for me and in a sense is the ‘shakti’ behind this. I am also deeply indebted to Durga maasi, Nawal maasi, both my mamajis and mamijis, my Hansa bua and phufaji, Durga bua, my cousins, my sisters, Sumati and Malvika, her husband Dinesh, my brother Ashish, my brother-in-law, Paritosh who provided the much needed boosting and help.

I am deeply indebted to Apala, Hem didi, Anjali, Nandini, Nupur, Babua da, Rudi, Nat, Temiza, and Vinita for 'being there', listening to me, advising me and being such lovely friends. Their support has been immense and I cherish it deeply. I acknowledge the support of Nivedita and Ranjit for being 'pillars of strength' whenever I needed them. There are so many people that it would be impossible to name all of them. However I would like to extend my appreciation to all those who have helped me accomplish this task.

I want to make a special mention of my little four-year-old nephew Dhruv who has been very sweet and affectionate and who, in his baby tones always managed to ask about my PhD whenever he knew that I was back from JNU. His laughter, his questions always lightened my mood to a great extent.

Finally, I want to thank the institution called JNU which has taught me a lot. Where I learned the culture of 'questioning' every little thing I was uncomfortable about and which gave me the courage to 'break silences' about issues generally brushed under the carpet.
