At the end, every research scholar must feel that his or her research experience has been 'special'. I thank Prof. Meenakshi Mukherjee, my supervisor for giving mine this 'special' colour. With her patient and astute guidance, the research process became a meaningful, rewarding and enriching experience. I thank her for her ready help and direction in the final preparation of the thesis.

My sincere thanks are also due to:

Prof Harish Narang for the use of his personal library.

All those scholars who had the 'one' or 'two' really meaningful suggestions to give. I sincerely thank Prof. Yasmine Gooneratne of Macquarie University, Australia, Prof. Shirley Chew of the University of Leeds, and Prof Judith Plotz of the Washington State University for giving me some of their valuable time during their visits to Delhi. I also thank them, and Profs Harold Barratt, University College of Cape Breton, Nova Scotia and Victor Ramraj, University of Calgary for their quick responses to my requests for material, addresses and bibliographical details.

Prof Elizabeth Gunner of the School of Oriental and African Studies, and Prof. Alastair Niven of the Arts Council of London, for granting me interviews while I was in London. I thank them for their help and suggestions. I also thank Prof Meena Khorana of Morgan State University for her time in Delhi and in Washington.

The British Council Division of Delhi and the Charles Wallace Trust for their assistance for my visit to England.
Adil for showing me the ropes in managing London and its libraries, and for responding to my desperate pleas for bibliographical help.

My friend Rama who, sitting in Edinburgh, did more than anyone by being constantly on call, faithfully bearing with my persistent and recurring demands for research material from England.

My friend Jill Didur for initial bibliographical help and subsequent continuance of interest.

Sushama Bhatnagar for her solicitous interest and scholarly advice and for her immense help in the location and the use of books in local libraries.

My dear friends Dr. Roopali Sircar, Dr. V.P.Rao, Dr D.S. Rao, for their friendly advice and comforting reassurance.

Ravish for doctoring all my computer illnesses promptly.

My sister-in-law, Prof Anvita Abbi for her never flagging interest and encouragement and for allowing repeated encroachment on her personal computer whenever mine packed up—which it did quite often. I also thank my other Jiji, Dr. Arpita Mishra for getting me some much needed primary reading material at the right time. My mother-in-law for taking over readily whenever necessary.

My father, General Ramesh Chandar, for helping me with the 'cleaning' of the text, and for final helpful suggestions. I thank my parents for the unspoken support of their palpable pride in my work.

Especially Anupam, my husband, for egging me on, and being with me always; to him and my family for making do with less of me.

Above all, I am grateful to the 'childhood' of my sons Tanmay and Anvay for actually getting me started.
