ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

Any research work and writing of a thesis can rarely be done individually. It is only with the guidance, cooperation and participation of a host of individuals that such an effort is possible. I would therefore, failing if I do not acknowledge the valuable contribution of the very many persons who helped me in my endeavour.

Dr. (Mrs.) P. Ramalingaswami, Associate Professor and a senior faculty of the Centre of Social Medicine and Community Health was my source of inspiration in proceeding down the unchartered waters of my research work. Notwithstanding her very busy schedule, she always made herself available, either at the centre or at home helped me in all my research and analysis. Her profound knowledge and experience in the field was the single most important factor in my thesis.

I owe deep gratitude to late Dr. S.K. Sahu for his comments, criticism and the encouragement and guidance he gave me while I was engage in this work.

In formulating my ideas and crystallizing my views, I am deeply indebted to Prof. D. Banerji and Prof. I Qadeer and Dr. Nayar. I am grateful to my institute NIHFW for helping me in this endeavour. I am also thankful to Prof. H. Helen, Director, NIHFW, for her constant encouragement to complete this work, in spite of my job responsibilities.

I extend my thanks to Dr. Lakhan Singh and Mrs. Rastogi, for their help in library research and bibliographical arrangements and to Mr. Ashok Kumar for his administrative cooperation and assistance.

Last but not the least. I am also extremely indebted to Mr. Bhupal Singh Bisht who not only manage to read my manuscripts, convert them into drafts and there after produced this thesis in its final shape.
