Acknowledgement

I express my deep sense of gratitude and thankfulness to my supervisor, Prof. R.K. Sharma. The thesis would not have been possible without his guidance and valuable suggestions. His guidance, suggestions and insights have immensely helped me to formulate the research problem and his supervision has improved the quality of the thesis. As a person, Prof. Sharma has always been a source of inspiration from the very beginning to the end of the thesis work. Mrs. Sharma and their son have always been extending warm welcome to me at their residence and I owe special thanks to them.

In the course of the thesis, I have received comments and suggestion from many of my teachers, colleagues and friends. I sincerely acknowledge the insightful suggestions of Prof. Gopinathan Nair, which have greatly helped me. I owe him for having taken the pain to go through the draft of the thesis word by word within the shortest possible time and he has always been a source for me to bank upon. I thank, Dr. Harilal for his comments and the discussion with have always been useful to me. I am grateful to Dr. Nagarj for his valuable suggestions and comments. I am greatly indebted to Dr. Pushpanganadan for his suggestions and motivation at different stages of the thesis. I express my thankfulness to Dr Panameswaran for his help and suggestions particularly on econometric modeling. My long-standing association and friendship with Mr. Naveen Chandra have immeasurably benefited me and I place special thanks and gratitude for his comments. I got to know him through my CDS friends, Babu and Neetha whose help in the completion of the thesis owe special mention. Also I extend my sincere thanks to Professors Ashok Mathur and K.P. Kannan for their valuable suggestions.

KRPLLD awarded me a fellowship for two years and I express my deep sense of gratitude to Prof. Narayanan Nair for the fellowship.

My discussion with Prof. Utsa Patnaik has enriched my understanding and perspective on the topic and I place it on record my thankfulness to the professor.

I would like to record my thanks and gratitude to all staff in the Centre for the Study of Regional Development. The documentation officer has always been nice to me and extended all helps possible. Vargheese and his staff have always been always been ready to sort out any issue related to computer and I owe special thanks to them. My special thanks are due to the library staff in the main library and Exim Bank library of the University. I thank the librarian and the library staff of the V.V.Giri National Labour Institute, Noida. For the thesis, my major source of reference was the library of the Centre for Development Studies, Thiruvananthapuram. I do express my thanks and gratitude to Anil Kumar, Anitha, Sankar, Usha, Chithambaram, Sunil, Gopakumar and other staff in the library.

In the Brahmaputra Hostel, Mr. Ashok Kappor has never failed to cheer me up with his sweet smile. The help he extend to me in the hostel needs special mention and I express my deep sense of gratitude to him. Mani Ram has always been nice with me. Cherian chettan, Yadav, Pramod, Panvada-Guruji and Pan Singh - They have left in me sweet memoirs to commemorate my good days in the University.

In JNU, my friends have really been an added attraction to me. Though most of them were much younger to me, I really enjoyed their company, friendship and personal care. Though Abilash is much younger to me, his originality of thought and emotive attachment to the social causes has made me closer to him. I am, greatly indebted to the personal care he extended along with Asif, who in the biting cold winter in Delhi left his room for me and allowed to work in his personal computer. He took special interest to see that the thesis is perfect in its every aspect. I hope I could do justice to him. I owe greatly to the Brahmaputra Hostel fraternity. George, whose room where every 'mallu' in Brahmaputra hostel loves to pay visit as frequently as they could, is a human being of the finest order. For me, he is one of the most dependable sources to make my thought process clearer. The young scholar, Muneer, his endurance, wisdom, patience and perfection with which he performed editing and proof-reading of my thesis calls for special mention and I place it one record my word appreciation and gratitude to Munner. I learned many statistical packages from Prasanth and his company and presence in the hostel was an asset not only to me but for many students in the campus. The help and company of Prabin would remain ever in my memory. I owe greatly to him. Sanu, whose company I always enjoyed, could spare time to go through the draft in spite of his busy schedule with his thesis. My short but rich association with Sankytty Pattankari has left ever memorable incidents. Reji and Sobin have always been concerned of my work and health. I enjoyed the company of Tinu, Justin, Mathew, Shiju, Happy, Martin, Jimmy, Sony, Narayan, Anish and Saji. My old friend in the campus, Gilbert who never fails to give piece of advice, has made my stay in the extended studentship, more enjoyable.

Mr. Suresh Kumar, whom I met in my M.A. class in Govt, Arts college Thiruvananthapuram still keeps the same old warmth in Delhi. Pyaralal Raghavan has been a as cordial in Delhi as used to be in ODS, Thiruvananthapuram.

In fact, a ceremonial thanks to farmers, labourers and activists from whom I took help for the field may be an injustice. Nevertheless, while abstaining myself from naming them, I record my bond and gratitude to each and every one of them.
I would like to place my deep gratitude to Dr Tharian George and the Rubber Research Institute of India for having granted me leave liberally. I owe special thanks to Dr Tharian for sparing me from office work, to work on my thesis. At RRRI, I have always enjoyed the company of Viswanthan, Veeraputhran Lekshmi, Binny Chandy and Joby Joseph. I thank Ammini and Leelamma for their affection. At RRRI library, Sasi, Sujatha, Lalitha, Kurian, Mercy Jose, Accamma, Ajitha and Shilaja have always been helpful and place it on record my word of appreciation and thankfulness. I do remember always the service and company of Ittichayan of the RRRI library.

My thanks to Vipin, who stays with me at Kottayam, for his research assistance and company. I owe a great deal to Hiran and Suja for sparing their evenings in listening to my wanton thoughts.

My family members have always been a source of inspiration for me. Though my absence for a pretty long period from home was painful to my mother, her persuasion could definitely be one of the stimulants which prompted to accomplish the task. The person who would have really loved to see my thesis, Mr.Sasidharan Nair, is no more to see the realisation of one of his wishes. My brother Madhusoodanan Nair was as concerned about my progress of my work as other members in the family. My other brothers and sisters and in-laws have always kept reminding me of the importance of accomplishing the task of completing the thesis.

I have never been troubled by domestic matters on any count as Bindu has silently shouldered all the contingencies of my extended studentship. My father in-law and mother-in-law have always been a source of inspiration for me, which rather compelled me to accomplish the task. I am greatly indebted to them for their love and affection. My children, Sanku and Sankari, have never been of demanding type. I really drew strength from them to go ahead with the thesis work.

A word of appreciation to Aravind, Ramu and Syam is in order in this context for the pain their enthusiasm to arrange computer packages for me.

Last of all, but not the least on any count, I would like to thank Shajahan, Kabir, Shibu, Binita, Radhkrishan, Vijayan, Rajendran, Saji, Preman and Krishnakumar, my friends in Thiruvananthapuram, and in my village, vellanand, for their well wishing. I would like to place it again on record my deep gratitude to one and all whom I interacted during the course of my thesis work.
