ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

The writing of this thesis has been a great process of learning and unlearning, dotted with memorable moments of friendship, care and cherished human emotions, which added both charm and meaning to this ongoing enquiry into the enigmatic issues of social existence. This was never a search in solitude, could never have been. The fact that many have contributed to the making of this thesis, in very many ways is a fabulous feeling. And this piece of 'Acknowledgement' is just a simple, and certainly inadequate, token of my appreciation for all of them.

At the 'take-off' stage of my work, interactions with G.N. Rao were helpful. Later, with Thomas Isaac and Sakti Padhi, my supervisors, I had several rounds of deliberations and they offered excellent comments. Because of them I could work in a free academic ambiance and their non-interference helped me venture into areas of newer ideas, which they appreciated ungrudgingly.

Fortunate as I was, K.K. Subrahmanian, who was my 'informal' guide, despite heavy workload and physical strain, went through the entire draft keenly, distilled the arguments embedded and suggested many ways to improve this thesis. His comments were incisive, his approach pragmatic and kindness worthy of him. I was deeply touched by his concern and affection.

It is difficult to measure the quantum of time Raman Mahadevan spent for me discussing and clarifying many puzzling issues and half-baked ideas. The best part of our interactions has been a growing and caring friendship, enriched by his characteristic openness to fresh lines of thinking.

At various stages I had useful discussions with Ashok Mitra, Prabhat Patnaik, I.S. Gulati, R.S. Rao, Baidyanath Mishra, S.L. Shetty, A.Vaidyanathan, Mridul Eapen, D.Narayana, K.K.George, and Michael Watts. They listened to me patiently, clarified issues, shared their views most generously.

Among friends, R. Nagaraj, Mihir Shah, Ashok Babu, Sumit Guha, S.Raju, M.S.S.Pandian, Radhika Srinivasan and Patrick Heller, keenly wanted to know what I was working on and spent time reflecting on the issues; that was an important phase in the writing process.

Some of the crucial materials were made available to me by B.D. Prusty, Banka Behary Das, S.B. Kar, K.W. Kurup, Sanandan, Lopamudra and Suresh. Without Geoji's help, often working with the computers would have been an ordeal.
Pyarelal, Rammohan, Rajeswari and Anandraj were with me always, who provided the much needed friendly social environment and with whom I could often share precious sentiments - the joys and sorrows of living - without ever feeling being obliged. We have been able to give to each other in the fullest measure, and have emerged richer by that. Rammohan was compassionate, intellectually a solid support and showed tremendous concern for my work.

My friends, Jiban, Kabu, Saroj, Sahu and Sanu enlivened my stay in Bhubaneswar and Trivandrum. They have shared the agonies in my search for vital materials.

Because of Girija I never felt the burden of typing the clumsily written manuscript. She took extra care to bring out the final draft neatly and prompted me to finish it faster.

The cool and efficient manner in which Krishnan Kutty xeroxed research materials has impressed me.

The library and administrative staff were cooperative and supportive. Ramakrishnan, Ramesh, Muraleedharan, Phil Roy and Chandrika were particularly helpful.

My heartfelt feelings for Tara - my friend and wife - whose deep interest in my thesis work was reflected in her offering very sensible and always frank criticism at almost every stage of developing ideas and writing. Her courage, support and affection during the real hard times provided me with the guts and senses to pursue the work uninterruptedly against all odds.

All through the years of my research work here, far away from my homeland, I have derived the inspiration and moral strength from my family. They have always wished me the best of everything. The simple and honest life led by my parents has made me hopeful and given meaning to my faith in the future. It is to them that I dedicate this work.
