ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

In the first place, I gratefully acknowledge ray sincere debt of gratitude that I owe to my Supervisor DR. V. B. N. S. MADDURI, who has bounteously contributed to my learning of the subject in my Post-Graduate and M.Phil classes in Economics. In essence it is because of his wise, prudent and judicious guidance, constant inspiration, fostering encouragement, and close supervision of my work that I am able to complete the entire thesis most successfully within a short span of time. Indeed, I was attracted to my research work and have taken it up as my profession mainly because of the keen interest, inquisitiveness, and innovative spirits enkindled in myself by his brilliant class lectures in the Post-Graduate classes which will be an eternal treasure-trove in my future academic life. In this context, I fervently hope and sincere trust that his wise guidance will be my true guiding spirit in my persistent efforts and endeavours in my future research career.

Next, I wish to express my warmest gratitude and sincere thanks to all the teachers in the Economics Department for their kind cooperation and training which stand in good stead throughout my research career in preparing this thesis.

Also, I shall remain highly obliged and ever grateful to the present Head of the Department, PROF. T. DIYAKARA RAO, who served as the infinite source of constant inspiration to me for his constant encouragement and roost valuable and precious suggestions throughout my research career.

I am thankful to the authorities of ICRISAT, BUREAU OF ECONOMICS AND STATISTICS, GOVT. OF ANDHRA PRADESH, CRIDA, NIRD, NARAM, A. P AGRICULTURAL UNIVERSITY, CESS for their kind co-operation and for giving me adequate access for using their library facilities and the statistical data used in this thesis.

My heartfelt thanks also go to MR. R. G. NAIDU, Documentation officer of Icrisat library, for his immense help and cooperation. My hearty thanks are also for the library staff of NIRD, APAU, CRIDA, CESS, for their perseverance and help in finding the required study materials and reports for me.
