The last two years of my PhD work have been probably the most challenging years of my life. To have to focus solely on the task of academic research and put every thing else in life on hold was quite demanding. When I look back at this time spend, I see not myself, but all those who guided, help and encouraged me and in numerous small ways, kept my moral high and trusted me to deliver on my task. I must confess that there was no way I would have been able to accomplish what I had set out to do without the support of the following people.

Professor Sen has been my guide in more ways than one. I must thank him for answering my calls every time and agreeing to meet me without fail. Each meeting with him was an eye opener and steered me and my work in the right direction. Without his overall perspective, vision and guidance my work would have been quite different from what it is now. I feel quite grateful and frankly lucky to have had the privilege to work with him over the past five years. I thank him for being there for me and moulding my research and hope that he is there in the future as well.

My data work, would have taken twice as long to have been completed, had it not been for Mr Kamble who worked tirelessly with me over the past two years to clean, and process my data and generate brilliant results from the same. His insights into the working of the NSSO organization, its data gathering methods and processing techniques were indispensible for the kind of data related work, I have finally managed to accomplish. For his shear dedication, hard work and persistence I shall be in his debt for ever.

I must thank Prof Kulkarni, (C.S.R.D, J.N.U) for his advice and suggestions regarding the various methods for my statistical analysis and taking time out to explain and illustrate the uses and advantages of each one of them. I am grateful to him for his time, suggestions and the interest that he showed in my work.

I must thank Mr Vergis, (C.S.R.D, J.N.U) who was responsible for generating some of the most beautiful maps for me, at the NSSO regional level, a task not attempted till date. The long and hard sessions which he had with me will always be etched in my mind. He was also the one I would turn to if I was faced with a tricky data processing or analysing problem. Even if he did not know a way out then, he would work it out and get back to me without fail. I must thank him for his time and work space and his ever readiness to help me out with the smallest of problems. I owe my entire map making endeavour to him.

When I started my data work using three different NSSO round data sets, all quite different from each other, it was quite a challenge to comprehend the small yet significant differences in data collection, presentation and processing methodologies across the three rounds. It was here that my friend Dr Himanshu stepped in and cleared the doubts and filled in the missing gaps with respect to the complexities and nuances which riddle the NSSO data sets. I thank him for being ready with answers at any time I called and making me feel that the task at hand was easy and quite doable.

I must thank Narander who sat long hours formatting and editing my final drafts and making them print ready.

I thank Nidhi for helping me with generating numerous tedious tables and saving my valuable time, without which delays would have been eminent and for egging me on when my motivation levels would hit a trough.

I am grateful to my friends Binniesh, Priya, Aryama, Bidhan, Koustabh, Neha, Lavi, Adnan, Saibha, Buna, and Shanivi and the entire JNU gang who give me the kind of encouragement and support that is required for such work. My dear mother, for her immense love, patience and support for me. My family members Vijay, Seema, Prakriti, Pranavi, Prakesh, Neeta, Kishor, Deepak, Suresh, Sugandha and all the rest who were immensely understanding and encouraging.

Last but in no terms the least, I thank my father without the love, support, encouragement and incessant, albeit well meaning ‘prodding’ this thesis would have not seen the light of the day. And as is apparent any mistakes or short comings are entirely my fault.
