ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

I consider it as a pleasant duty to acknowledge the abundant help and affection received from different quarters for the successful completion of this work.

First and foremost is to express my profound gratitude to my research supervisor and mentor whose guidance has not only enriched me academically but has also instilled in me a work ethos and a sense of commitment to the academic profession. Without the inspiration, support and help offered by him, both academically and otherwise, it would have been impossible to complete this thesis. I take this opportunity to thank him profusely. My association with him, as his student, since from my M.Phil, has helped me learn several aspects in life.

I express my sense of gratitude and my indebtedness to Prof. D.V. Raghava Rao, Head, Department of Anthropology, for his constant encouragement in this endeavour. Also, I wish to thank all my teachers, Dr. K.K. Misra, Dr. P. Venkata Rao, Dr. B.V. Sharma, at the Department of Anthropology, for providing the training, which enabled me to work on this thesis. Their useful suggestions and criticism at departmental seminars and discussions held with them, personally, were helpful and enhanced the conceptual and methodological clarity of this study. Particularly, I am indebted to Dr. Misra for his moral support extended to me all the years during my Ph.D. Prof. Haribabu, Prof. Chandra Sekhar Bhat (Sociology) and Dr. Seshan have encouraged me always, in completing this thesis. I profusely thank them.

I offer my thanks to the library staff, IGML, H.C.U; ISEC, Bangalore; NIRD, Hyderabad; CESS, Hyderabad; for extending their kind Cooperation in furnishing necessary records/documents and information regarding my research. I am indebted to M.G. Brothers family, Yemmiganur, without whose support my fieldwork would have been difficult. Particularly, my special thanks to Mr. Raghunadh (chairman, YWCS), who directed the YWCS staff to extend maximum support, due to his particular interest in my research. Also, my thanks are due to staff of YWCS - Main branch and also Gudekal branch - for extending necessary Cooperation and help. Office staff of the Department of Anthropology extended me their continuous support and help, variously, during my studies over years in the department. I take this opportunity to express my heartfelt thanks to Adinarayana, Sekhar, Ashok, Niranjan, Gupta and Vali.

I thank my colleague Aneei for his continuous support throughout my research work. Sandhya, Sunita, Swarnalatha, Balaram, Neeraj, Kavali, Ramaiah, Purendra, Arif, Harikrishna, Naziullah, Alam, Thaha, Hemanth and Narendra have been a source of great support during my Ph.D. work. I am extremely thankful to them and many other friends who, remain anonymous, have variously helped me in preparing the thesis. The kind acts that they had for me are too numerous to mention here.

I cannot forget the attachment I have developed with Gudekal weavers during my stay with them in fieldwork. Many of them have helped me numerously. I express my deepest sense of thanks and gratitude to all of them. I depended on Sri Madam Sankarappa's family (Yemmiganur) and Shiv Shankar Goud's family (Gudekai) for many a help during my fieldwork. I express my deepest sense of thanks and gratitude to them for the hospitality and their help. It would be incomplete if I do not acknowledge the help received from Sri Ibrahim, administrator, YWCS Main branch. It would have been impossible for me to complete fieldwork without his help. Prakash, Kumar, Gopi, Anjineyulu, Mabu, Goud, Ramu (my yemmiganur friends) stayed with me in difficult times during my fieldwork. I thank them for their hospitality and help in the field.

I do not find words to express my in-depth feeling of indebtedness to my parents, my sisters, brother and sister-in-law for their silent support through out my studies. I am extremely thankful to them for bearing with all the intractable problems generated in this journey towards Ph.D. They humbly accepted all the hurdles arisen in this endeavour. Also, I thank with immense pleasure, to Mrs. Siva Prasad and other family members. I must say that their continuous affection and hospitality benefited me in completing the thesis.

Last, but not the least, Sudha has been a continuous source of inspiration and strength over the past several years. Her persistent support in Ph.D. helped me a lot. A special word of thanks to her.
