Acknowledgements

I would like to thank my supervisor, Dr. Najaf Haider, for suggesting the theme of my research so that I was able to combine my knowledge of the Persian language, my interest in book history and Persian culture in India, and my present engagement with Indian history in a way that was both challenging and stimulating. Dr. Haider was generous to me with his time, suggestions, and encouragement, for which I express my gratitude.

The Indian Council for Cultural Research gave me a Junior Research Fellowship and I thank them for their support. The resources of the ICHR library in Delhi were of great value to me. In Delhi, I am grateful to the staff members of the National Archives of India, the staff of the Nehru Memorial Museum and Library, and the Indira Gandhi National Centre for the Arts Library, for their kind cooperation and help. During my research trip to Kolkata, I consulted the National Library and the State Archives of Bengal, and would like to thank their staff for the help. I would like to especially thank the staff at the Asiatic Society Library, Kolkata the resources of which proved invaluable for my research.

Most of all, special thanks to Devika for her support during the writing of this thesis.
