ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

It is with a deep sense of belonging that I express my heartfelt thanks to Dr. (Mrs.) Suman Gupta Professor of Philosophy, School of Languages, Jawaharlal Nehru University, New Delhi, but for whose encouragement and guidance this work would not have been accomplished. Her abiding intellectual honesty coupled with profound interest in philosophical pursuits have been a source of inspiration to me in conceiving ‘freedom’ of argumentation in this work.

I acknowledge my indebtedness to my teacher Dr. V. Chandidas, Lecturer, Department of Philosophy, S.V. University, A.P., whose sensitive suggestions made me realise the importance of Sartre and helped me in not being ‘simplistic’ in approaching an understanding of Sartre's Philosophy.

I express my gratitude to The Indian Council of Philosophical Research for awarding me a General Research Fellowship from 1986-1988 without which I would have 'lived' in turbulent times.

I am beholden by my Jahajie bhai's Roslyn Parmasad and Kenneth Vidya Parmasad, Trinidad (West Indies) who have helped me with the reading and the language correction of the first draft.

My loving thanks are due to my co-researchers Rakesh and Indoo Pandey who have helped me in so many ways and without reservation.

I was helped in many ways by my good friends who may not like to be acknowledged.

I am indebted to Mohan, Chelli, Ajay, Ritanath, Meera who have gone through my typed thesis to correct typographical mistakes and errors.

My heartfelt thanks are due to The JNU Library Staff who helped me beyond the normal call of duty.

B.B.C. TILAK