Acknowledgement

At the outset, I express profound gratitude to Dr. Imrana Qadeer and Dr. Ritu Priya who have guided me in my present effort over the last few years. I have drawn on their knowledge and wisdom freely and unabashedly since the inception of this work. Even at the risk of sounding clichéd, I would like to put on record their accommodating me at odd hours, not to mention additional sessions over the telephone and the e-mail!

I am thankful to my teachers at the Centre of Social Medicine and Community Health – Prof. D. Banerji for teaching me research methodology, and, Dr. S. K. Sahu and Dr. K. R. Nayar for developing my understanding of sociology. Prof. Ashish Bose taught me the importance of numbers, and to interpret them with caution! I express my gratitude to Dr. Mohan Rao for providing me with guidance and comments at the initial stages of the study. Dr. Rama Baru deserves special mention as a genuine well wisher.

I am thankful to Dr. Lakhan Singh for initiating me in the basics of field work. Mrs. M. D. Rastogi gave me encouragement and provided access to relevant literature. I take this opportunity to thank other staff members at the Centre.

I am grateful to Professors Amitabh Kundu, Jawaharlal Nehru University and Arup Mitra, Institute of Economic Growth for contributing to my understanding of issues in urbanisation.

I am indebted to Dr. Sat Pal, Municipal Corporation of Delhi, for being a family friend and providing constant all round support in his own inimitable and selfless manner during the research period. A special tribute to Late Dr. R. D. Rao who taught me the fundamentals of epidemiology of waterborne diseases in the lanes, by lanes and back lanes of Delhi! Thanks are also due to Dr. Shibani Bandyopadhyay of the Epidemiology Division, National Institute for Communicable Diseases for teaching me the finer aspects of field epidemiology.
Mr. Minocha and Mr. Vishnoi deserve a special word of thanks for their support during the field work. I also acknowledge the help and support of all the field workers for providing information on the ground situation and helping me develop an understanding of the field situation. I take this opportunity to put on record my deep appreciation of the time and effort enthusiastically contributed by all those 300 households without whose active co-operation a major component of this study would not have been possible.

I am indebted to the Delhi Jal Board for all the help rendered by several of its engineers. Particular mention needs to be made of Mr. R. N. Aggarwal, who gave me an insight into the system and has been a 'ready reckoner'.

I express my special appreciation for the National Institute of Communicable Diseases where I have been a regular reader at the library, a trainee in several national level courses on related subjects and have friends among the faculty, all of which have contributed to developing my understanding of the complex world of communicable diseases. I thank the staff members of the several libraries which I have accessed during the course of this study, with special mention of the National Medical Library, All India Institute of Medical Sciences, National Institute of Health and Family Welfare, Institute of Economic Growth and Jawaharlal Nehru University.

Words are inadequate to express my feelings towards my parents who have been instrumental in providing encouragement for this piece of work, specially during the incubation period. I am deeply indebted to my parents-in-law for their words of cheer and support. I record my appreciation of the support rendered by Kaku and Kakima in their own quiet style.

Finally, I acknowledge the endless help I got from Dr. Purnamita Dasgupta, my wife. She has made major contributions to this work based on her knowledge and expertise as an environmental economist. She has enriched the thesis as an in-house statistician and critic. Equally important, it would have been impossible to complete this large volume of work without a caring, understanding and encouraging partner. Sumo deserves special mention for cheerfully supporting his father's academic pursuits through his own little sacrifices.
