ACKNOWLEDGEMENT

At the end of my thesis, I would like to thank all the people who knowingly or unknowingly have contributed to making the thesis possible and which have been a great learning experience for me.

First, I would like to express my sincere gratitude to my guide and advisor Dr. Gayatri Goswami for the support of my PhD study and related research, for her patience, motivation, and immense knowledge. Her guidance helped me in all the time of research and writing of this thesis. I could not have imagined having a better advisor and mentor for my PhD study.

Secondly, I would like to thank all the faculty members of the department of Economics, Gauhati University for the total encouragement and support they offered during my research period in the university.

I would like to offer my thanks to my colleagues in the Department of Economics, Pragjyotish College, for supporting and bearing with me during my study leave period.

My sincere thanks must go to Jaysree Devi and Halodhar Talukdar, both former principal, Pragjyotish College for their support while we were pursuing for the study leave.

My sincere thanks go to Professor Jogesh Deka for his support during my research period and the UGC for granting the study leave without which the thesis may not have been possible.
A special thanks to my students namely, Samour, Biswajyoti, Bhanusmita and Bhanita who helped me immensely during my data collection period.

A special thanks to all my research scholar friends during the study leave period in G.U. from whom I have learnt a lot during our day to day interactions.

I must thank my husband Narayan Saikia who has been a constant support and source of inspiration to me. My thanks go to my daughter Rhea and son Mayank for bearing with my short temper and helping me with the computer. I thank all the other member of my family who encouraged me continuously during my research work. Special thanks to my uncle Dr. U.C.Das and sister Pratibha Das Hatiborua for pushing me forward and motivating me.

Finally, I am forever grateful to God and angels for helping and guiding me in every step of my research work.
