It is a matter of great privilege for me to acknowledge the help, guidance and encouragement which I received from several quarters during this research project.

I express my sincere gratitude to my supervisor Dr. Rajesh Kumar Sharma, Reader Department of English, Punjabi University, Patiala, who initiated me into the study of literary theory and its application. He introduced me to the world of Indian drama in English which is emerging as a resurgent force in literature. It is a great privilege to have worked under his very methodical and scholarly guidance. His very meticulous and thorough appraisals of my work inspired me to work harder and learn many new things. His critically insightful and constructive guidance has helped me to improve my work and give it a fruitful direction. I am also thankful to him for making my research experience interesting and enjoyable. Without him, I would never have been able to perceive literary theory as wonderful, intriguing and culturally and politically significant. But for his infectious enthusiasm, it would not have been possible for me to complete my work.

I am also grateful to other members of the faculty, Department of English, Punjabi University, Patiala, for their help and encouragement. I express my thanks to Mrs. Sunita Sharma for her motivation and encouragement. I am also thankful to Mr. Surinder Pal Singh for his help in the various important aspects of printing, binding and design of the thesis.

I am grateful to Dr. Paramjit Kaur, Principal and my colleagues at Khalsa College for Women, Sidhwan Khurd for their help and encouragement. My special thanks are due to Mr. Vikram Dev Thakur and Ms. Jaswinder Kaur who painstakingly proof-read the final draft of the thesis. Without their help and support my thesis could not have been completed in time.

I owe a great deal to my parents and my family for their enormous support and patience.
