ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

The present project albeit in a somewhat different form has been first suggested to me by late Professor Diptendra Banerjee, Department of History, Burdwan University, under whose inspiring guidance I did the work for two years during 1989-1991. After a tragic death cut short his eventful career, I started working under Dr Rajat Datta, Reader of the same Department. But my association with him did not last long since he soon joined the Centre for Historical Studies, Jawaharlal Nehru University. Thus troubled, I contacted Dr Balai Chandra Barui, Reader in History, Kalyani University, who graciously received me. I have completed this dissertation under his active supervision during 1992-1994. Obviously, my academic debts to all of them are unbounded. Particularly, I take this opportunity to pay my homage to the resting soul of Professor Banerjee, from whom I learnt more than I ever did from anybody.

Every researcher owes immense help to libraries and archives. So do I. Particularly, I wish to record the assistance that I have received from the directors, librarians and staff of the National Archives of India, the West Bengal State Archives, the National Library, the West Bengal Secretariat Library, the Bangiya Sahitya Parishad Library and the Burdwan University Central Library.

I had to work on this project while discharging my normal duties as a lecturer at Brahmananda P.G.B.T. College.
Neither had I been provided with any study leave nor any financial assistance from anywhere. Naturally, I had to undergo severe strain.

My personal debts are profound as well. Sri Biswarup Goswami, a research scholar in history of Burdwan University, helped me in various ways at the initial stage of my work. Sri P. C. Kapur, Librarian, Seminar Library, Department of History, Burdwan University, has supplied me with many old documents relating to Burdwan and its Raj family. He has also proved himself to be helpful to me otherwise. As regards inspiration, I have got enough of it from my wife, Namita, as well as from her near relations. I will be failing in my duty if I do not add that she pleasantly bore the boredom during my day and night busyness in research work and managed the entire household work besides looking after a baby. But I desist from giving her thanks in consideration of my relationship with her.
