Acknowledgement

What I express here is not a conventional, ritualistic acknowledgement but spontaneous and intense feeling of mine while sat for writing the acknowledgement. For a while, I wandered through my syntax in search of a word, which could reflect the fathom of my feeling and gratitude to my revered supervisor, Prof. M. H. Qureshi. I conceded to failure because I realized that I could not express his influence in me in few words. He has been so much inspirational and the meetings with him so delightful and thought provoking that after every meeting, I felt like I was thrown in the midst of nothingness, disposing me to search for new meanings and direction. Prof. Qureshi is a true guide in every sense, always guiding from behind, follows as a shadow to enthrall you to show the light in the end. Even after 35 years of teaching, guiding and research, he is still as fresh as I met him in 1989 as a pre-doctoral student. This thesis is an outcome of above process and I graciously express my gratitude and happiness for all that Prof. Qureshi has given to me as supervisor, teacher and philosopher.

There have been many other teachers, colleagues, classmates and friends contributed directly and indirectly to the conclusion of this thesis. My teachers at the Centre for Study of Regional Development, J. N. University deserves special mention here for their constant encouragement and academic inputs. My senior colleagues at the Indian Institute of Tourism and Travel Management, both at Gwalior and Bhubaneswar, have been immensely cooperative and their timely assistances have contributed to speed up this work. Particular mention is due to Prof. Sitikantha Mishra, my Director, Dr. Sandeep Kulshrestha, professor of my Institute and Prof. Kapil Kumar of IGNOU, for their constant inspirational scholarly assistance. Other colleagues have also extended me valuable cooperation whenever needed, which I gratefully acknowledge on this occasion. I also thankfully remember the secretarial assistance extended by Muktar Ahmad, Iti Mohanty and Sidhartha Sankar Nanda of my Institute in preparing this work.
There are many others whose help and assistance have been immensely useful and rewarding in this exercise. Dr. G. Ravindran, former Joint Director General in the Department of Tourism has been generous in giving me access to many official documents, which I thankfully acknowledge here. Discussions with him on policy matters and its implementation also provided me new direction of thinking. I also recall the assistance of Mr. Dripto Mukhopadhaya, my classmate and friend, and Mr. Varghese. K, System Analyst at Centre for the Study of Regional Development, J. N. University to familiarize me in the SPSS package. Mr. Nihar Dash also deserves my words of appreciation for preparing digitalized maps.

I understand that acknowledging every one assisted during fieldwork by name is not feasible here due to paucity of space. Even then, it will be injustice if I fail to thank the co-operation of the local residents at Calangute, Cavelossim and Kovalam for their unprejudistic whole hearted co-operation. The elders like Sreekant Chary of Calangutu, Wilfred D'Souga of Cavelossim and Gangadharan of Kovalam deserves special mention for not only making the field work smooth but also for providing many valuable personal anecdotes.

Last, but most important, is my family and friends. I have only very few words to express the understanding of my children Gouri and Sambhu, who were more than happy to spare my time due to them even at this small age, for completion this work. My wife Rekha has been very supportive and encouraging. There can be no words to record my feeling for my mother’s inspiration and emotional support through out my life and also sparing me for a half time for not meeting her. My sister, brother and in-laws whose support and encouragement I thankfully record here. Finally, I thank the invisible force in me, which has been guiding me through the path of goodness and success.
