ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

This thesis marks, in ways more than one, the beginning of a new journey for me—a journey that hopefully would ensure that the theses’ suggestions graduate into action from being black letters and become socially/legally relevant. Also it is hoped that the research benefits me personally/professionally, propelling me to greater professional heights. The journey of writing the theses was not traversed as a lonely traveller. It has been a result of ceaseless and seamless support and encouragement of numerous people including my well wishers, my friends, colleagues and family. I would like to thank all of them from the core of my heart.

More specifically and firstly, it is a pleasant task to express my thanks to my supervisor, Dr Poonam Saxena, presently the Vice Chancellor of NLU Jodhpur and a very senior faculty of the Delhi University. This work would not have been possible without her encouragement and limitless trust in me. Her unflinching conviction in my abilities is what kept me motivated throughout. It is also one priceless compliment that would remain with me forever. She indeed gave me immense freedom to pursue independent work, guiding me however with her experience and wisdom whenever required.

If there is one person I owe the timely completion of the thesis to, it would be Prof Ashwani Kumar Bansal, presently Dean, Faculty of Law, DU. Directly or inadvertently, it is him who made it possible that I remain on track and not waste my energies into the myriad tasks that normally surround an Indian woman.

I am also extremely indebted to my colleagues K Ratnabali Jha and Dr Awekta Verma for their valuable and timely advice on issues that I sought counsel on.

I thank Dr Rajesh Sagar, a friend from the UK, for volunteering to go through my theses despite being overloaded with numerous prior commitments. His troubleshooting abilities, constructive criticism and constant moral support helped me sail through difficult times.
How can I ever thank Dr Kumud Bharti, my dear sister, for her priceless insights and comments that helped me clear so much air regarding medical procedures, protocol and practice revolving around medical treatment of the pregnant woman and the unborn in India. I cannot fail to mention her infrastructural support in letting me raid her printer whenever required!

My gratitude would not be complete, unless I thank my family- foremost my mother Mrs Manorma Rani for giving me unconditional support and encouragement; my husband Arvind for bearing with a perennially occupied or pre-occupied me and my dearest 3 year old Pihu for coping with my absence when I worked for hours together tirelessly. I doubt that I will ever be able to convey my appreciation fully, but I owe them all my eternal gratitude.

I would like to specially acknowledge my father, Mr Parkash Chander for inculcating the importance of academics into me and also my dear Naani Late Ms Sohini Devi for remaining my inspiration forever, even in her absence. I am sure that this work would make them proud.

Lastly, and most importantly, I maintain that more than my merits, it has been His grace that has seen me complete this formidable task. I thank thee for thy guiding light.
