Acknowledgement

My experiences in the doctoral program offered me opportunities to learn and grow both professionally and personally. I would like to mention some of the people who have contributed to this research, directly and indirectly.

- I am deeply appreciative of the guidance of Dr Vrinda Datta - you have been with me every step of the way and I have learned so much from you. Some of the best times I recall have been spent discussing issues about early childhood and other common areas of interest with you. I shall always be grateful to you for being the first to take an interest in my research ideas; and for facilitating my growth.

- I thank Tata Institute of Social Sciences – an institution which not only provided the requisite infrastructure but also facilitated a multidisciplinary approach to research. Thanks to Professor Jayaram for his willingness to provide insightful feedback. I credit Dr Mathani for making me believe that I could do qualitative research through her engaging lectures.

- Deep gratitude to SV (Mr V Srinivas) – for the refreshing ‘evolution’ you have facilitated in me; for nurturing my ‘evolutionary competencies’ and for being a source of amazing inspiration (I must mention, for unhesitatingly giving me periods of leave to work on this thesis).

- The data gathering for this thesis has been dependent on the willingness of teachers sharing their experiences. I express my gratitude to them for letting me into their classrooms and for giving me the opportunity to interact deeply with them, sometimes at the cost of giving time from their already tight schedules. Their enthusiasm, energy and honesty have enriched me and this research work. To each one of you - thank you for your openness to share your story and for allowing me into your life.

- I thank the Principals of the schools which permitted me to conduct the research in their schools (Purnimadi, Neha Joshi, Sonia, Zarine Virji, Kavita Agarwal, Ritu Bugra, Sakina, Hanif, Bindu & Amrita) and also my colleagues, who ‘put in a word’ for me to make the process easier – Monisha, Archna, Kusum, Pragna & Vandana. Special thanks to Binaifer & Bhairavi for all the trouble I gave them (since theoretical sampling was saturated by the time things worked out, I could not include the school in the sampling).
• To Dr Rajani K – for being a friend over the years and your feedback, especially for the Melbourne paper.

• Dr Linda Levine, who sent me her articles and helped to clarify initial misgivings related to my research.

• To Ujjwala and Surita, for all that they mean to me – your ‘pushing’ me to complete it actually worked!; and to Sudha and Prativa, for our ‘soul’ discussions.

• Friends have been beside me throughout this time. Premlatha - I truly treasure your support, your feedback, our ‘study time’, ‘deep’ discussions and the unbelievable help during the last few months; Chandrani - your helpful suggestions on qualitative analyses has always been enriching; to all the 5th floor PhD Hostel inhabitants (my ‘de-stress’ space!) and other friends I made in the past four years - Nandini, Vaidehi, Rama, Sainthani, Pragya, Aashima, Milly, Sister, Susan, Anirban, Devika, Saurabh, Hema - I am grateful for your wonderful collegiality and willingness to put up with my dissertation woes!

• It is truly my privilege to be a part of the Illumine team where I have worked with an extraordinary team and assimilated the true meaning of contribution; Rebecca, Parul, Angad, Vidy, Suprio, Aarti, Abhishek, Kumar and everyone else at Illumine – thanks for all the moral support! Ameeta, I value your feedback as an anthropologist! Jitu, thanks for the superb finish!

• I acknowledge my appreciation for Nalini Chugani, Shirin Choksey, Myrtle Nazareth and other EC members of IAPE for believing that my research was indeed worthy. Nalini - thanks for sustaining your faith in me. It means a lot to me!

• Sarah, I thank you for the brilliant transcriptions!

• Munira, I appreciate your enthusiastic support in the coding.

• Barron, thank you for the timely help.

• Rashi and her friend, for helping out with the editing.
And lastly, I cherish the close relationships of the two extended families who matter the most to me – it is without doubt that this geniality has provided the backdrop to pursue my work in the smoothest possible way. To each one of you, I owe a debt of gratitude –

Baba – for maintaining your pride over the years believing that I could become a ‘Doctor’ (& letting me choose my way rather than yours!);

Ma – for your steadfast positive attitude towards life which has helped me innumerable times to look at the larger picture; & for being the first teacher to inspire me!

Dada – for influencing me so deeply to believe that I can always make my dreams come true;

Dali - for your friendship & thoughtfulness;

Didi – for being ever willing to boost my morale (I will treasure the gift of faith you have given me);

Of course, the three delightful girls, Ani, Kuhu & Tia, who have enriched our lives;

And especially

Indrajit – for just being the gem of a person that you are; your unadulterated pride in my achievements and your exceptional support - in spite of your previous experience of my research just after our marriage!

Thanks all for lasting this journey!
