Acknowledgements

A new born in the arms, no initial support systems and a specific time frame to start as well as complete a PhD study; this was what I began with and the whole journey after that towards completion of this thesis has so far been the most physically and emotionally challenging experience of my life. This experience shall forever be borne in mind and cherished. I, therefore, take this opportunity to acknowledge all those who had made this journey possible for me.

First of all, I would like to mention the person who has not only been my research guide and mentor but also one of the most inspiring and yet extremely modest personality that I have come across in my life and who is Prof. S. Siva Raju (Chairperson, Centre for Development Studies). During our numerous meetings in the past two to three years and the long discussions we had had, I was always astonished by the immense patience and moral support he had displayed for me. I duly respect him as an individual and a research guide and am extremely grateful to him for the time, support and encouragement he had provided to me during the whole course which made it possible for me to meet all the deadlines and produce my report on time.

I am deeply grateful to Prof. Parasuraman (Director, TISS), Prof. Lakshmi Lingam (Dean, Research and Development, TISS) and Prof. C. Sengupta (Dean, School of Social Sciences) for considering me eligible to be awarded the TISS-LSE fellowship. This fellowship not only provided me the much need financial support to carry out a research of this nature, but also provided me the much desired opportunity to visit the prestigious London School of Economics as a visiting scholar for research work and consultation. The opportunity had helped enrich my study in terms of analysis and interpretation.

During my visit to LSE which was for six weeks, Prof. Ruth Kattumuri (Co Director, Asia Research Centre) had been extremely helpful and accommodating towards me and I am extremely grateful to her for her valuable comments on my study. I would also like to thank her for giving me an opportunity to present my study and analysis at a seminar held at LSE, where I received important suggestions from other experts. I would also like to thank Dr. Sally Stares (Faculty, Methodology Institute, LSE) for the help and co operation she had extended for discussing my ordered logit regression problems during the analysis. I would also like to thank Mr. Keith, Mr. Kevin and Diya for all the administrative support they had provided upon my arrival at the Asia Research Centre and making me feel comfortable in the office.

I would like to thank my D.A.C. members Prof. R. N. Sharma (Professor, Centre for Development Studies) and Prof. H. Beck (Professor, School of Social Work), Prof. N. Jayaram (Dean, School of Social Sciences, TISS), Dr. Anil Sutar (Associate Professor, Research and Development, TISS) and Dr. Bino Paul (Associate Professor, Centre for Management and Labour Studies, TISS) for their valuable comments and suggestions which helped fine tune my research. I thank all the library and EDP staff of my Institute for supporting me during the entire course and seminars. I also thank Gandharv for all his assistance at my guide’s office during our meetings.
I am extremely grateful to all my respondents in Dharmaj (Gujarat) and Mangalam (Kerala), who had been so patient and cooperative to understand the complex issue that I wanted to study and gave me their time to answer so many questions. I would like to mention all those people in both the villages of Dharmaj in Gujarat and Mangalam in Kerala with whom I made initial contacts and later on who had cooperated with me till I finished my study:

Firstly I would like to thank the then District Development Officer of Anand, Gujarat, Dr. Rahul Gupta, who had introduced me to Mr. Rajesh Patel from Dharmaj. Mr. Rajesh Patel had been extremely helpful and enthusiastic about my visit to Dharmaj and has extended all the possible support he could from accommodation to contacts with all the key informants in the village. His book ‘Dharmaj: A Village to Emulate’ that he had presented me had all the necessary first hand information I needed before I landed in the village. I thank all those people in the village who gave me all the necessary village related information I needed including Ritaben Patel (Sarpanch), Naineshbhai Patel (Panchayat officer), all the bank managers, Chetanbhai Gajjar (Building Contractor), Hemanthbhai Patel, Nalinbhai Patel and Sudhirbhai Gajjar (Jalaram Jan Seva Trust, NGO). I am thankful to the authorities of Jalaram Mandir for all their support and care during my stay at their guest house. I was also happy to have another researcher from Netherlands, Natascha Dekkers in Dharmaj who was a very good company and with whom I had fruitful discussions regarding our research.

In Kerala, my first contact person was the Block Development Officer of Tirur block in Malappuram district, Mrs. Preeti Menon. I am extremely thankful to her for her support and encouragement for carrying out my survey in Mangalam village. I thank Mr. Aneesh (Village Extension Officer, Mangalam) and all the bank managers for all the village related information they had provided. I would also like to thank the Agricultural officer of the Krishi Bhavan located in the Panchayat office of Mangalam for all agriculture related information and data he had provided. I am extremely thankful to Ms. Latika for assisting me during my data collection in Mangalam, without her it would have been almost impossible for me to communicate with the respondents in Mangalam because of the local language (Malayalam). I also thank the Muslim Education Society Hostel authorities in Tirur to provide me with the accommodation.

I would specially like to mention Dr. Dilip Ratha (Lead Economist, Migration and Remittances Unit, World Bank), Dr. Manuel Orozco (Senior Associate and Director, Remittances and Development at the Inter-American Dialogue, Washington D.C.) and Prof. Ronald Skeldon (Professor, Sussex Centre for Migration Studies, U.K.) for appreciating me for realizing the importance of the study on remittances in India and offering me their valuable comments. I would also like to thank Prof. S. Irudaya Rajan (Centre for Development Studies, Trivandrum) for sharing his experiences on study of remittances in Kerala and offering suggestions for my study. I am equally obliged to Dr. S.K. Sasikumar (Senior Fellow, V.V. Giri National Labour Institute, Noida) for encouraging me to take up this comparative study of Gujarat and Kerala states.
I am also highly grateful to Dr. Bhupal Singh (Assistant Adviser, Division of International Finance, Department of Economic Analysis and Policy, RBI) for giving me his valuable time for discussing the macro data related to remittances and providing me with valuable suggestions on the analysis. In this respect I would like to thank Nadhaneal in RBI for arranging the meetings with Dr. Singh each time I wanted.

I would specially like to thank all those people who made my stay in London for research work, so comfortable and successful. First of all, I would like to thank Manhar uncle for offering me to stay with his family and connecting me to Dharmaj Society of London (DHASOL) members during my stay. Secondly, for my visit to LSE, I am highly thankful to Mrs. Sudhaben Patel and family for offering me the paying guest accommodation in their house and being so kind and making me feel at home. Again, I thank Manhar uncle for arranging this contact for me. I would also like to thank Mukundbhai Patel (President of DHASOL) for his time for an interview session with him.

My endeavours to complete my thesis within time and meet deadlines would not have been possible had I not received the love and support of my friends. I am extremely thankful to Chandrani and Joyeeta, especially, to encourage me and make me believe that I can do a PhD in spite of having the responsibilities of a mother. I am also highly thankful to Subash for his constant encouragement and support and providing me with all the study materials that were outside my reach, instantly, whenever I needed. I thank Vaithegi, Sayantani, Nandini, Sister Susan, Rincy and Shaoni for all their encouragement and wishes. I thank Barsha for being around every time I was at TISS and needed some one to discuss my academic as well as personal developments.

I would certainly like to thank Dr. Samapti and Kishore for their academic suggestions as well as non academic support and outgoingness that have been so comforting all through.

Finally, I would like to thank my family for being the perfect support system during times I needed them the most. Heartfelt thanks to my father-in-law and mother-in-law for landing up in Mumbai each time I needed their help. I am also extremely grateful to my father for doing the same when needed. I thank Didi and Anjanda for their love and encouragement from a distance. I am extremely glad and thankful to Ahana for being such a cooperative child right from the time I started working for the study. In this respect I would also like to thank Anima for being such an understanding caretaker of Ahana, which helped me allot sufficient time for my work. Lastly, I am extremely thankful to my husband Debasis to have wholeheartedly supported me for taking up a PhD study firstly and then providing me all the support to constantly give it the required time to be completed.

The consequences of not having received the support and encouragement of all the above mentioned people is unimaginable and hence this makes me grateful to all of them forever and I thoroughly apologize for having missed any names inadvertently.
