ACKNOWLEDGEMENT

At every stage of my academic career it becomes all the more clear that learning is an interactive and interpersonal process. As much as I would like to believe that it is self will and motivation which drives us, most of our achievements would not be possible without the guidance, inspiration, affection and support of family, mentors and friends. My entire Ph.D. experience here, in JNU has been a rite of passage, a process of remoulding, learning and venturing into turbulent waters alone! I look back to recollect happy memories, embarrassing and annoying episodes which are laced with laughter, insecurity and pride, yet which have taught me a lot.

At the outset, I take the opportunity to thank the following for their unflinching and thorough support in making this research a reality and success.

I am immensely grateful to my supervisor Dr. Rajesh Rajagopalan for having allowed me to work in a field of my interest. The guidance, encouragement and support extended by him have helped me tremendously not only in my endeavour but also have given me an opportunity to re-orient my approach towards learning and over all my academic pursuits. As I hope to build a career in academics I look towards him with the expectation that he will provide his valuable guidance as and when needed. This research involved sweat, despair and innumerable drafts which, without the enormous patience and perseverance of my supervisor, would not have seen the light of day. Sir, I wish to express my sincere gratitude for all your guidance and criticism.

Equally significant has been my interaction with the honorable Chairperson, Prof. Murthy, and Prof. Varun Sahni who helped initiate the thought process in my mind. I acknowledge my indebtedness to my all teachers and staff in the Centre.

Prof. K. R. Sharma has been a constant source of constructive criticisms which has actually helped me to evolve gradually to this level. To me he has been both, a tough trainer and a sympathetic person. Mr. Rajib Ray has been a source of constant support. Dr. Veena Kukreja has been helpful in most of the academic discussions. I would like to extend my heartiest thanks to Dr. Promodini Verma, Principal, Bharati College, who has been not only a respected and patient colleague but also a cooperative senior member of the collegiums of the faculty in the college campus. She has encouraged me to facilitate the completion of my Ph.D. and has helped me in all ways feasible. I look forward to a longer learning process and more cherishing relationship with her in year to come.

My cordial thanks are due to the staff of the various libraries, who have helped me to locate material during my research work. The Institute for Defence Studies and Analyses, Jawaharlal Nehru University, Department of East Asian Studies; University of Delhi, American Central Library, Teen Murty Library, and Sapru House have been extremely useful.

Most importantly I wish to thank my ever supportive family members; Ma and Papaji; Nishant and Prashant for their pricking plain criticisms on my writing skills which have been a source of constant improvement. This thesis would not have been possible had Sonali not read through each of the chapters (looking for teeny weeny mistakes). I extend my thanks to my seniors and juniors of the centre, hostel friends, specially Anupama, for academically contributing to this research; Rashmi for letting me use her internet resources and Shiv for sharing his wisdom regarding library facility and internet facilities in the library and computer centre. Ajay Chacha constantly urged on me the importance of finishing this work. He bore with me the stress related to research and encouraged me to take responsibility for all my mistakes and to rectify them. For lightening that load, no amount of gratitude will suffice.

Last but not the least, the Almighty, whose presence I have always felt and who bestowed on me a scholastic ambiance and stimulating environment.

For the many shortcomings that remain in this thesis I am, needless to add, solely responsible.
