Contents

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>List of Tables</th>
<th>i</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Abbreviations</td>
<td>ii-iii</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Chapter One: Introduction

Statement of theme
- Purpose and propositions
- Existing literature
- Applying Walt to the case study of Pakistan and China
- Applying Walt to the case study of North Korea and China
- Rationale
- Research methodology
- Structure of the Study
- Limitations
- Summing up

Chapter Two: Alliances in International Relation Theory

Definitions
- Different theories of alliance
- Stephen M. Walt: balance of threat
- Alternative theories
- Case studies on alliances
- Summing up

Chapter Three: Pakistan–China: An Opportunistic Alliance

India as a dominant security concern: 1947-1980
- Other security concerns
- Pakistan’s response to challenges
- China as a balancer
- Development of Sino-Pak alliance: 1947-1980
- Evolution of Pakistan’s threat perception in the 1980s
- Pakistani responses
- Pakistan’s threat perception in the 1990s
- Pakistani responses
- The Recent Years
- Summing up
Chapter Four:
North Korea-China: An Asymmetric Alliance
  An overview: Korean peninsula, hub of balance of power in East Asia
  Major security concerns until 1979
  DPRK’s threat perception in the 1980s
  Major responses
  External balancing: China
  DPRK’s threat perception in the 1990s
  Major responses by North Korea
  External balancing: China
  Summing up

Chapter Five:
Comparing the Case Studies
  The cases
  Evaluating the factors that affect the threat level
  An Evaluation
  China, not a threat to Pakistan and North Korea
  The post-Cold War years
  Impact of the threat perceptions on security negotiation
  Summing up

Chapter Six:
Conclusion

References

Appendix