Acknowledgements

First and foremost, I would like to express my deepest gratitude to Dr. Pius Malekandathil for his caring and inspiring guidance to complete this study. Apart from timely suggestions and critical feedbacks, his constant encouragement and support enabled me to successfully accomplish independent research work cutting across the fields of urban history, maritime trade, and early colonial history. My intellectual and friendly indebtedness to him, in many respects, is incalculable.

I drew insights from the wide-ranging discussions with many scholars from across disciplines. I thank Prof. Dr. K.S. Mathew, former head of the history department at Pondicherry University, and now founder director of IRISH, Kerala, who not only helped me by opening up his vastly resourceful library for consultation but also patiently directed me during my field work in Goa and Thalaserry. His enthusiasm and Joie-de-vivre always set the yardstick for me to cultivate the qualities that a sound researcher and a grounded teacher must possess. I also benefited immensely from the personal guidance of late Prof. Charles Tilly, the Joseph Buttenwieser Professor at Columbia University, New York. I personally feel very lucky to have consulted Prof Tilly, only a few months before his death and during my stay at Columbia, for discussing larger theoretical issues on urban history, colonialism, State and society.

My heartfelt thanks and loving gratitude are due to my Portuguese teacher and a great linguist Dr. Jose Leal Ferreira Jr. for helping me in the difficult task of understanding 16th and 17th century documents. Despite his immense workload and ill health, his enthusiasm and dedication in helping me translate medieval Portuguese texts against their spatial and temporal contexts have added depth to this work.

I am highly indebted to all my teachers in J.N.U and University of Delhi especially Prof. Dr. Sunil Kumar, Prof. Dr. T.K.V Subrahmaniam, Prof. Dr. S.Z.H Jafri, Dr. Rajat Datta, Dr. Najaf Haider, Dr. Vijaya Ramaswamy, Dr Upinder Singh, Dr S Menon, and Dr. Rajan Gurukkal for coaching me in the basics of historical interpretation and instilling in me the dreams and confidence to pursue a career in academics. Special thanks are due to Prof. Harjit Singh, C.S.R.D, J.N.U. for granting me an interview to discuss theoretical issues such as urban evolution and mapping the expansion of towns geographically.

This thesis wouldn’t have been possible but for the friendly assistance, care and loving prayers of many people and institutions in Delhi, Goa and New York. My heartfelt thanks to Dr. Agnelo Fernandes for his kindness in sharing with me rare books and articles that he collected from Portugal and Rome. Despite his busy schedule he was extremely selfless when it came to granting time for resourceful discussions on manuscripts housed at the State Archives at Panjim and pointers on tracing the necessary documents. A special thanks also to Mr. Shriguru Baghi, manager of the Archaeological Survey of India Museum at Old Goa for his help in clarifying several of my research related doubts and Sister Jyoti, for the personal tour of Santa Monica. For giving the finishing touches and geographical accuracy to the maps and city plans that have been reconstructed in the thesis, I owe a special thanks to Mr. Tamil Selvan, G.I.S Dept, J.N.U. His patience, student-friendliness and work efficiency explain his popularity with research students including myself. My fieldtrip to Goa and resource collection would not have been possible without the bonhomie of Fr. Savio (Xavier Council of Historical Research), Agnes D'Souza and her family (Amanda, Dr. Amber and Amit) in Goa. I am grateful for the loving care, prayers and kindness of Agnes and Dr. Amber during the highly stressful and traumatic days after the “accident” which remains etched in my memory forever.

I also acknowledge and thank the staff and librarians at the State Archives of Goa, Panjim; Xavier Center for Historical Research (XCHR), Alto Porvorim; Central Library, Panjim; Institute for Research in Social Sciences and Humanities, Thalaserry; Vidya Jyoti, Delhi; I.C.H.R. Library, Delhi; Teen Murthy Library, Delhi; National Archives library, Delhi; Portuguese Cultural Center, Delhi; Avery, Butler, Bernard, SIPA Libraries at Columbia University, New York; New York Historical Society Library and the City University of New York Library for their friendly assistance in locating manuscripts, rare books and printed documents.
Finally, a big thanks to my friends and family for their love and support. The prayers and love of our friends in Delhi, Kerala and America—Shailaja Raj, Deepa Khakha, Ticy Thomas, Geetika Michelle, Satvika Garg, Adv. Dileep Poolakkot, Gracy Chechy, Dr. Charlotte Patton, Rev. Kate Flexer, Rev. Michael and Johanna Shafer, Jenny Tally, Anne Gorrisen, Dorian and Mitzi, Miranda Kennedy, Ted Jones and Biju Joseph—kept the ball rolling and spirits high. I especially thank my parents-in-law (K.A. Maria and K.J. Joseph), Dali chechy, Bindu chechy and Reji chachan, Beena chechy and my aunts Mercy Mariamma John, Sarasa Joseph and Suma Geever for their support and prayers; Chandy and Eliamma Varghese (my uncle and aunt) for their encouragement and providing us a home away from home in Philadelphia, U.S.A; and, my uncle Dr. John Dayal for granting me access to his well stocked library.

This thesis would not have been possible without the silent support of my parents, Saramma Varghese and V.P. Varghese. My mother has undergone equal amounts of stress coping with a very demanding and slightly dazed (and in her words impossible to handle) daughter during the long (and definitely tiring) process of research and thesis writing. I am indebted to both her and my father for their selfless help that enabled me to effortlessly accomplish the many milestones in my life.

My husband, Vinod K. Jose has been my constant pillar of strength in this academic journey. His timely push, inspiring energy, encouraging and intellectually stimulating conversations added the right dose of excitement and satisfaction at undertaking and accomplishing this work. This thesis is dedicated to him, and, to our little bundle of joy, Kaniv Ouseph, whose arrival in this world, needless to say, speeded up the process of writing!
