Acknowledgments

This work evolved with the efforts and support of several people and institutions. Foremost among them are my supervisors, Professor Shyam B. Menon and Professor Gaysu Arvind, who guided, supported and inspired me during this study. Both of them initiated me into a world of ideas and thoughts, which not only shaped the work but were critical in bringing about a refinement in my thinking and ways of making sense.

Interactions with Dr. Jayshree Mathur and Professor Rama Mathew, who were my teachers during the PhD coursework, were also critical in the development of this thesis. I also learnt immensely from Dr. Geeta Menon and Mr. Ajay Kumar Singh, both of whom facilitated several opportunities in which I could engage with the practice of education and experience a variety of work situations.

My association with the Department of Education enabled me to develop various kinds of relationships in the field and outside. It was only because of my identity as a student of CIE that I could situate myself in the field. The process of fieldwork was also facilitated by the two NGOs where I located a part of the work, and by the Sarva Shiksha Abhiyaan. Ambedkar University, Delhi, was also very supportive in the course of the fieldwork and writing. AUD provided me quality time, space and resources for completing the work.

I express sincerest gratitude to all the informants whose contribution to the work is equivalent to (if not more than) mine. I wish to share the authorship of this work with the informants (particularly the children) whom I met in the field.

I thank the University of Delhi for sponsoring my work under the teaching assistantship scheme for two years. The University holds a special in my life and learning. This work is dedicated to the University and to the field informants.
