ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

First and foremost, I owe wholehearted thanks to my dynamic and charismatic supervisor, Prof. Santosh K. Sareen, for his valuable expertise, kindness, support, patience, suggestions and criticism of my work here and elsewhere. I thank him for introducing me to Australian studies and for giving me a chance to prove my merit.

The development and completion of this thesis would not have been possible without the financial support of the Australian Government and its various institutions. I would like to thank the Endeavour Asia Programme, Department of Education, Science and Training, Australian Government which enabled me to visit Monash University, Clayton Campus, Victoria, Australia in 2006-07. My special thanks to Dr Tseen Khoo for hosting me there. Thanks also to the staff of New South Global International Projects, National Centre for Australian Studies, School of Political and Social Inquiry, School of English, Communication and Performance Studies, and Matheson Library of Monash University for tolerating me and my demands, as also the academic community of Australia who helped me with information and advice throughout my stay in Australia and still continue to do so through prompt correspondence.

I am indebted to Dr Andrew Hassam for encouraging me to apply for the Endeavour Asia scholarship, his friendly advice, constructive criticism and a firsthand introduction to the Australian way of life which helped me formulate the theoretical framework for this thesis. Without his friendship and initiation, I wouldn’t have made so many more Australian friends with such ease!

I am greatly indebted to Prof. Makarand Paranjape for introducing me to Diaspora Studies and being my mentor. I greatly benefited from his lectures, discussions, encouragement, and co-supervision in my M. Phil. research so that I was able to develop some of my ideas before this study commenced.

My heartfelt thanks to Prof. Harish Narang and Dr Navneet Sethi for being the first in making me an “A+ student,” which instilled in me an unshakeable confidence in carrying out research in new areas and making my own way.
My thanks and appreciation goes to my thesis committee members, Prof. G. J. V. Prasad and Prof. P. K. Pandey, who are always generous in their criticism and praise. In addition, thanks to Prof. Kapil Kapoor, Dr Saugata Bhaduri, and Dr Dhananjay Singh for their invaluable support and recognition. I must also thank the staff, Rawat ji, Radhe ji, Bhagwati ji, and Karamchand ji, at SLL&CS, Jawaharlal Nehru University for their administrative help and the jokes.

It is a pleasure to thank the many people who made this thesis possible with their wise advice at various junctures of time in the last four years of my research: Late Prof. J. V. D'Cruz, Prof. David Walker, Prof. Bruce Bennett, Prof. Yasmine Gooneratne, Prof. John Ramsland, Prof. Bill Ashcroft, Prof. Stephen Muecke, Prof. Vijay Mishra, Prof. Brij V. Lal, Prof. Satendra Nandan, Prof. Rae Frances, Prof. Bruce Scates, Prof. Peter Snow, Prof. Richard Nile, Prof. Didier Coste, Prof. Igor Maver, Prof. Paul Sharrad, Prof. Devleena Ghosh, Prof. Marie de Lepervanche, Prof. John Webb, Dr Chandani Lokugé, Dr Lachlan Strahan, Dr Kama Maclean, Dr Richard Hosking, Dr Sonia Mycak, Dr Toni Johnson-Woods, Dr Geetha B., Dr Trevor Hogan, Dr Margaret Allen, Dr Suvendrini Perera, Dr Peter Murphy, Dr Lisa French, Dr Larissa Jane McLean Davies, Dr Sissy Helff, Dr Michiel Baas, Dr Alice Healy, Dr Sharon Rundle, Dr Bernard Whimpress, Dr Selvaraj Velayutham, Dr Manas Ray, Dr Pramod Nayar, Dr Asha Chand, Dr Gabriella T. Espák, Ms Lily Petkovska, and many other scholars with whom I had the pleasure and honour of working.

I would like to acknowledge my teachers and friends of my Undergraduate days at Sri Aurobindo College, University of Delhi, who laid my foundation in literary studies:

My thanks to Dr Vijay Laxmi Pandit, Dr Jafri S. Abbas, Dr Chander Shekhar Singh, Ms Bharti Sharma, my colleagues and students at Rajdhani College (University of Delhi), who have always been supportive of my academic interests and activities.

Personally, I am grateful to Russell, Jenny, Sean, Rebecca, Peter, Suboohi, Ehsan, Rakesh, Tupur, Sati and all other friends who made me feel at home in Australia. My thanks and best wishes must also go to my dear friends at JNU, especially Gunjeet, Pradip, Aniruddha, Shantanu, Amrita, Amit Ranjan, Prateek and Devapriya. A very special thank you to my dearest friend Aneeta for her guidance and help during the various stages of the work on this thesis. I greatly appreciate the detailed comments made by her that helped me to revise various parts of the thesis.
She did her best to stop me but here it is!

My love and thanks to my parents, parents-in-law, brothers, my entire extended family and all my in-laws for their constant care and unconditional love.
Most importantly, I would like to express my most profound love, appreciation, and thanks to my wife, Reema, for her generous praise, advice, encouragement, guidance, proof-reading and love. I would be lost without her!

I dedicate this thesis to the writers of South Asian diaspora in Australia to whom I am eternally grateful for writing such wonderfully thought-provoking narratives and creating such memorable characters, who are indeed “living” men and women, drawn from their life experiences.
“Australia is the most dangerous country in the world,” said the brochure the Rentokil man left in our letter box when he came round to spray the foundations of our house against funnel-web spiders and redbacks. Those are the creatures every newcomer to Australia is warned about.
