ACKNOWLEDGEMENT

This thesis grew out of guidance and blessings provided by my guide, Prof. Ajay K. Dubey. As soon as I joined CWAAS as M.Phil student, Prof. Dubey motivated me to work in diaspora studies. During the preparation of synopsis, Prof. Dubey asked me the area of my interest and I told him that he should suggest me a topic which may have relevance to Indo-African history because I had completed M.A. degree in History. Prof. Dubey was kind enough and he immediately asked me to explore the issue of African diaspora in India. Finally, the M.Phil work was titled ‘African Diaspora in India: A Historical Analysis’. On getting registered as Ph.D student in 2003, I started working to find out a topic for thesis. As I had already submitted M.Phil work on the issue of African Diaspora, my guide asked me to explore the case study of African diaspora in India. Although, he asked me to work on the case study of Siddi community of Gujarat, but I was given enough freedom to choose a case study of Siddi community of Karnataka.

Prof. S. N. Malakar continuously encouraged me to work on African studies. He was always available whenever I approached him. Let me frankly accept that Prof. Malakar always motivated me for PhD degree whenever I met him whether inside the centre or outside the centre. I always got a complete sense of belonging from Prof. S.N. Malakar.

I gratefully thanks to the Siddi community of Karnataka from the bottom of my heart as the Siddi community gladly helped me to get all the relevant informations regarding the Ph.D work. I passed many days in Karnataka during field trip, but the cooperation offered by the Siddi community created homely environment. In fact, they warmly allowed me to take photographs, ask any questions about community and even facilitated my visit to Siddi settlements.

I would like to thank the staff members of JNU library, Delhi University, Central Secretariat Library. My gratitude goes to Jalees Bhaijaan who formatted my thesis with full cooperation.

I am highly indebted to my guardian Prof. Ganganath Jha and Mrs. Premlata Jha. They always provided crucial support whenever I faced tough time. Whenever I found myself as exhausted research scholar, their blessings were enough to put me back on the track of Ph.D. It is really very difficult to express thanks for their blessings.
I am also indebted to my wife, Dr. Anju Gurawa who always encouraged me to complete Ph.D. Her multidimensional personality always assured me Rock support and she continuously helped me throughout the Ph.D work. The culture of hardwork taught by my parents always acted as a source of inspiration to complete the thesis.
