This is the first study to conclude that structured moderate intensity aerobic exercise can act as an imperative line of therapy in the management of DPN, to halt its progression and clinically induce reversibility of nerve functions.